• Bethlehem Catholic monastery lost seven-year legal battle against building of Israeli security fence on its land. A Catholic monastery and convent in a secluded valley outside Bethlehem lost a seven-year legal battle against the building of Israel’s security fence on its land on Friday, according to its lawyers. The Society of St. Yves, a Catholic human rights group which argued the case on the monastery’s behalf, said an Israeli appeals court had endorsed a plan to expand the barrier it had built in the area. The wall would surround the convent on three sides and cut it off from most of its land, St. Yves said in a statement. Salesian monks and nuns tend lush vineyards and olive trees on terraced hillsides under the gaze of Israeli settlements there. A convent school teaches 400 local children. Israel started building the fence, a mix of metal fencing, barbed wire and concrete walls, in 2002 in response to a wave of Palestinian suicide bombings. It says the barrier keeps its citizens safe from terrorists. St. Yves argued "that the plan would violate international law and conventions protecting religious minorities and the right to education and freedom of religion", said Anica Heinlein, its advocacy officer. • Israel is to build a two-section cable-car system to take visitors to and from the Western Wall from either side of the city, Jerusalem’s municipality announced Monday. The cable car, which is set to be introduced in 2015, will transport 6,000 people an hour, setting them down and picking them up close to Dung Gate (Sha’ar Ha’ashpot), the Old City gate closest to the Wall. One section of the line will run to Dung Gate from near the Seven Arches Hotel on the Mount of Olives in the east of the city. The other section will run from the Hinnom Ridge, near the Menachem Begin Heritage Center and the Khan Theater, along a route similar to that used by a cable car that maintained a connection to the Old City in the 1948 War of Independence. The project, which has been under discussion for several years, will offer a “wonderful experience” for visitors to the city, Jerusalem’s Mayor Nir Barkat said. He added that it would link up to the capital’s Light Rail system, and greatly ease traffic to and from the Old City. Some 10 million visitors currently visit the Western Wall each year. (Times of Israel 30 April 2013)

• The new Israeli Minister of Housing Uri Ariel announced the approval of 50 new residential units in East Talpiot, an Israeli settlement neighborhood (located across the Green Line) (also see the report from Arutz Sheva). Under normal circumstances, the decision to approve these new units would likely not have merited a public announcement, nor would the approval have garnered much attention. While the new units are across the Green Line, they are basically the expansion of an existing senior care facility in the area and do not represent a major change to the status quo on the ground. Why, then, the announcement and the press attention? The hook for Ariel was Holocaust Memorial day – according to Ariel’s announcement the units will be for holocaust survivors. It was also a way to poke a finger in Kerry’s eye. • IDF troops provide security for all West Bank outposts - regardless of legal status. 25 unauthorized outposts are guarded by a special force tasked with 'community protection,' whose soldiers typically spend a full week at a time guarding and protecting the outpost where they are stationed. One quarter of all illegal West Bank outposts are regularly guarded by Israel Defense Forces soldiers. These 25 unauthorized outposts are guarded by a special force tasked with “community protection.” Soldiers from the force typically spend a full week at a time guarding and protecting the outpost where they are stationed. Every professional army officer who does not serve in a front-line unit must spend one week a year protecting these settlements. They must do a regular tour of duty in the West Bank, the Jordan Valley or the Kerem Shalom region near the border of Gaza and Egypt. Protection duty is assigned to both regular and reserve officers. In 2010 and 2011, for example, numerous reserve officers were assigned to guard the unauthorized Givat Assaf outpost, where some 30 families live. The High Court of Justice heard a case involving Givat Assaf in 2007 and later ruled that the homes must be evacuated because they were built on privately owned Palestinian land. Yet to date evacuation has repeatedly been postponed. Other illegal outposts where reserve officers are stationed include Givat Dagan, which according to the NGO Peace Now has some 30 residents; Eshtemoa in the south Hebron Hills, which has some 40 residents; and Mitzpe Yair, where eight families live. The IDF has also added troops to larger illegal outposts such as Mevo’ot Jericho, which has 100 residents; and outposts far from army bases. According to a Central Command officer, the IDF provides some form of security for all settlements, regardless of their legal status. He said evacuation orders come from the political echelon, and that the IDF will continue to provide security until it receives orders indicating otherwise. “The army provides security for illegal outposts too, since this is a military issue only. ... Every community can be protected, and it is irrelevant whether it is legal or illegal,” said an officer who previously served in the West Bank. Some illegal outposts – because they are located near other, large settlements, or are satellite outposts of those settlements – are guarded by regular army units who are on operational duty in the area. Some are guarded by units stationed in the settlements to provide security. Many settlements have switched in recent years to hiring private security companies to provide civilian guards. Over the Passover holiday, 12 reserve soldiers were assigned to guard the illegal Booster outpost next to Negohot, where 10 of the mobile homes were empty as the settlers celebrated the holiday elsewhere. Local security coordinators are in charge of the guards on duty in their communities. These coordinators are usually employed by the local authorities or the nearby settlements. The commander of the regional brigade decides which settlements and illegal outposts receive soldiers for guard duty. These brigades also have an officer who works with the security coordinators and various other bodies. (Haaretz 3 April 2013)

- Israeli court orders settlers to return land to Palestinian owners. Judge deems sale of 100 dunums of land within the settlement of Alfei Menashe as fraudulent; key ruling further invalidates land laundering schemes that have grown prevalent in the West Bank. The Tel Aviv District Court ordered 100 dunums of land within the settlement of Alfei Menashe returned to their Palestinian owners after ruling that the contracts purportedly documenting the sale of the land were forged. The key ruling further invalidates a series of transactions made following the fraudulent sale. The land in question originally belonged to Palestinians who fled to Jordan when the Israel Defense Forces entered the West Bank in 1967. The territory was categorized as abandoned, meaning the Civil Administration was given responsibility for the land until the owners returned. Fraud involving abandoned land is common, since the owners have difficulty tracking their property from abroad. In 2001, a company named G.R.A. ostensibly bought land from a Palestinian from Qalqilyah for $150,000. Then, in 2006, the deed to the land was transferred from G.R.A. to another company, Harei Bracha, which specialized in construction for the Haredi sector. That year, the heirs of the land’s original owners found out that it had been sold, and petitioned the Tel Aviv District Court, alleging fraud. The ruling in the case was handed down this past Wednesday by judge Yehoshua Gaifman. The judge sided with the Palestinian petitioners, ruling that the land should be re-registered under their names. He cited two reasons. First, the transactions were not cleared by the Civil Administration, as required under a 1967 order mandating that all West Bank land transactions be approved in order to prevent fraud. Secondly, the judge cast doubt upon the authenticity of the transaction that facilitated the transfer of the land to Harei Bracha; he suggested that the supposed sale was a cover up that was meant allows the purchasing company to claim it had no knowledge of the original fraud. Both companies denied any wrongdoing. Gaifman’s decision carries implications for all real estate deals made in the West Bank over the past two years. The real estate division of the Yesha Council, which oversees the settlements, is working toward purchasing land on which illegal outposts are built, including Amona, Givat Assaf and Migron. None of these transactions have received Civil Administration approval. Furthermore, the ruling asserts that individuals or groups who have not received approval for a land purchase will not be able to claim they were unaware that the transaction was forged, thus curbing the laundering schemes that have grown prevalent in recent years. - Israel refusing to give in to demands for gestures of goodwill, believes Palestinians making demands for preconditions in bid to sabotage peace talks 'We are ready to discuss everything - in direct talks'. Talks yes, gestures of goodwill no. Senior officials in Jerusalem who were present during talks between US Secretary of State John Kerry and Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu claimed Wednesday that Israel does not intend to present any confidence building measures towards the Palestinians. The sources claim that the "preliminary demands presented by the Palestinians attest to the fact that they are peace refusenik. We on the other hand are not presenting any pre-conditions, not even recognition of Israel as the national home of the Jewish nation." US Secretary of State John Kerry is attempting to renew talks between the two sides but it is not going to be simple. Possible gestures like releasing prisoners or withdrawal from Area C in order to enable the Palestinian Authority to carry out projects were rejected outright.
"There will be no response to any demand where the purpose (of the demand) is to supply appease the Palestinians and make them come to the table," an Israeli source noted. "Ministers are unanimous over the decision of not giving in to any pre-condition. They present conditions in order to make the process of renewing direct talks difficult. There will be no gestures, especially not land withdrawals." Netanyahu has extensive government and cabinet backing. This is why it was decided that no pre-conditions be made on the Israeli side. That said, even before Kerry's arrival, the prime minister refused to allow Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas to present the US secretary of state with maps that include the borders he hopes will be included in the permanent agreement."We don't have any pre-conditions but the Palestinians prepared a list with (demands) like a building freeze, releasing prisoners, and border deliberations before everything (begins). We are ready to discuss everything, but only within the framework of direct talks where we will demand recognition of the Jewish State and declaration of the end of the conflict." The source speaks of Israeli inflexibility, while Netanyahu and Kerry have already discussed economic measures that Israel will offer to the Palestinian Authority, even in Area C. "You want cellular antennas? No problem. You want a sewage treatment facility? Can do. It's possible that in a month 10 prisoners might be released, but that's small change," the source added. With regards to the Palestinian demands for gestures – that is n't going to happen unless it's around the negotiation table. The Palestinians will continue to pressure (us) for gestures and Israel will not accede to gestures as a pre-condition to negotiation. (Ynetnews 11 April 2013)

- The politics of water: Palestinians bracing for another dry summer. On average, West Bank Palestinians have access to about 70 liters of water a day per person; inside the Green Line, communities use about 300 liters per person. Deep beneath the Israeli coastline and the West Bank mountains, groundwater flows back and forth in ancient, natural stone basins, without impediment from the borders, barriers or checkpoints that separate Israelis from Palestinians. Aboveground, trans-boundary water, primarily controlled by Israel, streams into Israeli faucets year-round, but into West Bank Palestinian faucets only sometimes. Water shortages in Palestinian towns and villages are expected to begin in the next weeks, as the weather warms up. Who owns and can benefit from the shared waters of the three sub-basins of the Mountain Aquifer system and the upper Jordan River basin? Is it the entry or exit point, or direction of the flow of the water, or is it the precedent of pre-1967 use that determines ownership? ... have access to about 70 liters a day per person, although in some areas availability is as low as 15 liters, depending on the season. In contrast, Israeli citizens inside the Green Line or in West Bank communities utilize around 280-300 liters per person a day year-round, according to rights organizations; water NGOs and the Palestinian Water Authority. - Israeli population exceeds 8 million on eve of Independence Day. Jewish-Israelis make up about 75 percent of the population; 70 percent of them are native-born. In the past year, approximately 19,500 immigrants arrived and the country’s birthrate came in at 1.8 percent. On the eve of Independence Day, Israel’s population has reached 8,018,000 residents, the Central Bureau of Statistic announced on Sunday. When the country was established in 1948, the entire population numbered just 806,000 people. Israel’s current Jewish population is 6.042 million people, which amounts to 75.3 percent of the population. Israel’s Arab population is 1.658 million people, or 20.7 percent of the population. There are also 318,000 residents, or 4 percent of the population, categorized as "other," according to the census. Since Independence Day last year, the Israeli population grew by 138,000 people, a growth rate of 1.8 percent. During this period, 163,000 Israelis were born and 41,000 died. The number of immigrants who arrived in Israel in the past year was approximately 19,500. By the end of 2011, more than 70 percent of Israel’s Jewish population was comprised of native-born Israelis, compared to 35 percent of Jewish Israelis in 1948. That year, Israel only had one city with more than 100,000 residents: Tel Aviv-Jaffa. Today, 14 cities in Israel boast a population greater than 100,000, and six of them have more than 200,000 residents: Jerusalem, Tel Aviv-Jaffa, Haifa, Rishon Letzion, Ashdod and Petah Tikva. - IDF legal authority: No criminal probe needed over Gaza operation. The IDF Military Advocate General has decided not to investigate any of the 80 complaints and incidents of possible crimes or violations during the Israel Defense Forces' Gaza offensive in November, Operation Pillar of Defense. The decision was made after 65 of the 80 complaints were individually examined. Among the incidents reviewed was the Nov. 18 attack on the three story home of the Dalu family in which 12 Palestinian civilians were killed on the bloodiest of the eight days of fighting between Israel and Gaza’s Islamist Hamas-led armed factions. When the investigation was launched earlier this year, the IDF stressed that it was under no legal obligation to investigate the incidents, most of which were not accompanied by any kind of complaints. According to Palestinian reports, 163 Gazans were killed during the operation, and more than 1,200 were wounded. A large portion of the Palestinian casualties were members of terror organizations. - The Israeli government decided to extend the ban on Palestinian family unification requests for an additional year. The ban affects families in which one of the parents is a Palestinian while the second carries an Israeli ID card, and is based on what Israel alleges to be “security considerations”. As part of the law, Palestinians from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, or residents who entered Israel from “hostile countries” are not allowed to enter and live in Israel despite the fact that they are married to Arab citizens of Israel. The ban was initially instated in 2003, and the Israeli Supreme court criticized it; consecutive Israeli governments kept reinstating it. The law does not apply to family reunification for Israeli Jews married to foreign spouses, and Israeli Arabs married to citizens of foreign countries, excluding Arab states. (IMEMC 15 April 2013)

- Netanyahu deputy minister of religion "must not release terrorists". Eli Ben-Dahan, who is minister of religious practice, called Memorial Day ceremony not to release terrorists and added that the Jewish Home Party opposes any gesture toward the Palestinians. The religious affairs minister said Eli Ben Dahan that forbids Israel to release terrorists. During his remarks Ben Dahan said that "soldiers risking their lives in order not to hurt the old man or an innocent child, to the point of risking their lives, while opposing the terrorist savages willing to hurt children, women and old people without mercy." Ben Dahan implicitly criticized and said that IDF risking too often "even against the theory." Deputy Minister recalled the story of Adele Bitton, mortally wounded by stones thrown at her car along with her mother and three sisters and called on Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "stand proudly and not to release terrorists, whether terrorists with blood on your hand or without blood on their hands. Well as those they supposedly without blood on their hands, their intention was to kill, but failed God’s help." Ben Dahan added that: "The Jewish Home oppose unequivocally gestures. Ended the period of giving and giving. Has negotiated". The Deputy Minister also noted the case breakout session ”Netivot Yosef” Mitzpeh Jericho, which occurred a few weeks ago and said that "entered terrorists Netivot Yosef yeshiva, students were” persistent "came to learn even during vacation" between the times. "One of the guys wanted to sleep in the Beit Midrash but did so at the end it was a great miracle. - Israel will allow construction companies to build new homes between Maleh Adumim and Jerusalem despite international opposition, Housing Minister Uri Ariel has declared. Ariel took part Tuesday in an event in the area Plans to build housing for Israelis in the area, known as E1, have been met with opposition from the Palestinian Authority and the international community. “We will fulfill our right and our obligation to build here. In another year and a half apartments will be built in E1,” Ariel said on Tuesday, during an event in honor of Independence Day. Ariel was accompanied by Deputy Minister of Religious Services Eli Ben-Dahan, a fellow member of the Bayit Yehudi (Jewish Home) Knesset faction. Ben-Dahan said, “On Independence Day, we saw the strength and heroism of the people of Israel and its leaders in standing up to opposition from within and without to announce the establishment of the state, against all the odds. “I call on the Prime Minister to continue in the path of David Ben-Gurion, to demonstrate courage and strength of will in the face of opposition to construction in E1, and to act toward the successful implementation of the building plans he announced,” he concluded. - Ofra fence was dismantled, security has been beefed up. Following the Supreme Court decision dismantled Fkm"z the security fence surrounding the settlement. And now, there is no barrier between the houses in the community and the nearby Palestinian villages After the High Court ordered to dismantle the fence of the settlement of Ofra, the army undertook to establish other measures in place to prevent penetration into the community - but yesterday (Wednesday) was dissolved fence without established new measures, and the community spent the night exposed without protection. In September 2010, Palestinians petitioned the village of Ein Yabrud High Court to order the state to dismantle the fences that surround the settlement of Ofra, claiming that the fence was built on land owned and fence prevents them from reaching their fields. Command Center delayed its response, and a few months ago the Court IDF to dismantle the fence by the end of 2012. Upon learning that the judges Ofra residents ordered to dismantle the fence, petitioned the Supreme Court demanding their court to order the army to build a fence along a different locality, and to provide additional safeguards. After the petition was turned Central Command Secretariat ore, and after discussions between the parties agreed that the residents of ore will appeal petition, and at the same time rejected the settlement provided safeguards and security. Among other things that dismantled the fence instead be deployed Many guard dogs, smart cameras and other means. Yesterday came the Command’s Logistics Center to the fence and began to dismantle it, without the safeguards provided agreed. Watchdogs have not yet reached Ofra, and the cameras are placed that can provide the kind of warning. Ofra fence that surrounded the fence so far is "stupid" - iron fence and barbed wire, with no means of defense and electronic identification, and now there is no absence in the southern parts of the ore every obstacle that prevents penetration into the community. Binyamin Regional Council head Avi sees to Ma'ariv said last night: "I suddenly remembered that an order of the Supreme Court orders to dismantle the fence until two months ago. This is a serious failure and shame that things are not done properly. Must finish putting safeguards, and only then dismantle the fence. " IDF spokesman: "In accordance with the decision of the High Court ordered the Central Command commander Gen. Nitzan Alon on removing the fence and providing alternative security elements Ofra. Instead placed security cameras and reinforced protection forces settlement activity. Similarly, planned construction of additional security measures." (Ma’ariv 18 April 2013)

- Israel to Annex Arabs Living inside Security Fence. Attorney-General Yehuda Weinstein has decided to instruct the government to provide all PA Arabs living on the Israeli side of the Security Fence with full social security and state-supported health insurance. The decision comes as a result of multiple lawsuits demanding state acknowledgement of human rights for Arabs whose homes were established before the construction of the fence, finding themselves now with no choice but residence in Israel. - Israeli plan to rebuild Herod’s tomb scapped due to experts' criticism. The reconstruction of the West Bank monument, which would have set a precedent as the world's first archaeological structure to be fully restored, was championed by a local politician but slammed by archaeologists and academics as ostentatious and populist. A plan to restore the original structure that held King Herod’s tomb at Herodion in the Judean Desert has been scrapped after it came under fire from archaeologists, tour guides and other experts. The tomb of King Herod was located in 2007 by archaeologist Ehud Netzer, who found its remains on the slopes of the mountain fortress south of Jerusalem. Netzer used the archaeological findings to create a model of how the magnificent three-story structure may have looked. He also suggested trying to rebuild the mausoleum at the site. After Shaul Goldstein, the former head of the Gush Etzion Regional Council was named director of the Israel Nature and Parks Authority, the plan was expedited and preparations to restore the tomb began. The new structure was to be 25 meters high (as high as an eight-story building) and made from lightweight materials. The project would have set an international precedent; while partial restorations are common, it is not customary to restore entire structures at archaeological sites (Haaretz, 18 April 2013).

- Israel's AG issues new directive on rights of Palestinians living outside Jerusalem, inside separation fence. Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein’s order safeguards rights of Jerusalem Palestinians to social benefits, also effectively strengthens the status of the barrier as city’s de facto border. Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein has ordered an end to the revocation of social welfare rights of Jerusalem Palestinians who moved outside the city’s municipal borders but on the Israeli side of the West Bank separation barrier. The decision remedies a long-standing grievance of tens of thousands of Palestinians. It also strengthens the barrier’s status as Jerusalem’s de facto border, not the city’s actual municipal boundaries. According to existing law, Jerusalem Palestinians who move beyond the municipal border lose their Israeli residential status as well as their eligibility to National Insurance Institute benefits. Following Weinstein’s directive, however, those who move to areas between the city limits and the separation barrier will keep their NII benefits. In many past cases, the NII halted payment of benefits to Palestinians who had moved only several meters beyond Jerusalem’s official borders. Following several cases in which Palestinians with Israeli ID cards demanded their NII benefits since they reside on the Israeli side of the fence, though not within Jerusalem’s city limits, the attorney general was obliged to deal with the matter. A statement submitted yesterday to the Jerusalem District Labor Court by the NII following Weinstein’s directive asserts that Palestinians with blue ID cards making them residents of Jerusalem even if they now live between the border and barrier should not have their rights harmed. Weinstein made it clear, however, that the liberalization will not apply to Palestinians who moved into the area after the construction of the security barrier, but only those who were living there when the barrier was constructed. After the Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem following the 1967 Six-Day War, East Jerusalem Palestinians were given the right to Israeli citizenship, but few opted for it. Nonetheless they carry Israeli identity cards and unlike West Bank Palestinians are entitled to Israeli social welfare.
benefits. Most sections of the separation barrier follow Jerusalem’s municipal borders as drawn after the city was unified in 1967. However in some areas the lines do not coincide, leaving tens of thousands of Palestinians living in Jerusalem but on the eastern side of the barrier, which has seriously impacted their lives and the municipal services they receive. • MK Miri Regev to tour Jerusalem’s Temple Mount to examine resumption of Jewish prayer. ‘I do not understand why a Jew is not allowed to pray in the most sacred place for him,’ says the Likud MK, who will visit the volatile spot to see if Jews can gain access for prayer there. MK Miri Regev, the newly elected chair of the Knesset Interior and Environment Committee, wasted no time after her appointment on Wednesday to make an inflammatory announcement: She will visit the Temple Mount in Jerusalem and examine the possibility of securing the return of Jewish prayer at the red-hot site. Regev, who was officially selected as committee head on Wednesday morning, said just after the appointment, "I don't understand why a Jew is not allowed to pray in the most sacred place for him - the Temple Mount." The Jerusalem site is one of the most contested in the world and the historical home of both Islam’s third-holiest shrine and both ancient Jewish temples. Currently, visitors to the site who are recognized as religious Jews and seen to be visibly praying are expelled. Regev added that she intends to make the issue of prayer arrangements at the Western Wall one of the aims of the committee and considers the topic to be one of her new responsibilities. In response, MK Moshe Feiglin (Likud-Yisrael Beiteinu) said, "We definitely should be allowed to visit the Temple Mount." He expressed great indignation that even today as an MK, he is prohibited from entering the Temple Mount. Deputy Finance Minister Mickey Levy, who served as commander of the Jerusalem District in the Israel Police, waged heavy criticism against Regev’s plans. Levy is the only coalition representative to publicly condemn her initiative. "This is a provocative and unnecessary move that could inflame the area and lead to grave consequences. I hope that after she got the headline she was after, she will drop this dangerous and irresponsible idea and go back to running committee meetings where they belong – in the Knesset," Levy said. A visit from an Israeli politician to the Temple Mount is regarded as an inflammatory act. The visit by opposition head Ariel Sharon on September 28, 2000 is generally seen as one of the sparks that ignited the second intifada. The following day, riots broke out in Jerusalem and throughout the West Bank, and seven Palestinians were killed by police fire. But tourists and Jewish travelers began trickling back to the Temple Mount in 2003, and since then MKs and ministers have visited the Temple Mount several times without provoking any riots. Visitors in recent years included MK Uri Ariel, Deputy Defense Minister Danny Danon and former MKs Arieh Eldad and Yoel Hasson. MK Moshe Feiglin tried to visit the Temple Mount several times over the past year. His last attempt was following his appointment to the position of MK at the beginning of March. - The Israeli High Court approves another postponement of Amona eviction. Eviction of illegal outpost set for April 30 deferred again to July 15; residents insist that motions to evict are meant to 'harm everything Zionist, Jewish in this country'. The High Court of Justice approved the postponement of the eviction of the illegal outpost Amona, setting July 15 as the new eviction date. In March, the State motioned the High Court of Justice for postponement of the eviction, which was scheduled to take place Tuesday. The High Court justices who approved the deferment Sunday noted they were granting postponement in the case of the Amona outpost for the last time. The State was initially supposed to evict Amona, which was built on privately owned land, by the end of 2012, but in November 2012, Justices Asher Grunis, Esther Hayut and Hanan Melcer granted the request and gave a new deadline for the eviction – April 30, 2013. In response to the decision, the Yesh Din human rights group stated "the court's ruling today... reinforces the call that the illegal outpost should be evicted, as it was built illegally on stolen private land. We hope that the State honors the court's ruling without delay." The human rights group added that the Palestinian petitioners they were representing were "eager to return to their lands." Amona residents nonetheless insisted that "Over the recent months, dozens of dunams were acquired and are presently owned by Jewish proprietors. Let us not forget that the Arab petitioners are claiming only parts of the lands of Amona... and have not proved ownership of the lands." The outpost residents added that the petitioners' goal, as is the goal of their "lawyers and the radical left is to harm everything Zionist and Jewish in this country. In light of that, we are certain that the new cabinet, led by Likud and Habayit Hayehudi ministers will work to inform the court that the State had changed its position and is not about to harm Zionism by evicting a settlement in the land of Israel." The outpost was formed in 1995, and was developed gradually with the addition of structures over the years. In 2008, a legal proceeding into the legality of the outpost was initiated, resulting in the State acknowledging that the outpost was in fact illegal, leading to a decision to evict it in its entirety. (Ynetnews 30 April 2013)
