• The Jerusalem municipality is continuing to name roads in the city’s Arab neighborhoods, but is maintaining its policy of keeping politics off the streets. The Municipal Names Committee approved 43 street names for Arab areas, but the names are devoid of any symbolism or historical significance. In Beit Safafa, for example, streets will be given Arabic names meaning apartments, granary, sickle, pitchfork, mirror, flood, ladder, bridge, unity and faith. In the Old City, streets were named "Plaza" and "Hotel." In Umm Tuba, the approved Arabic names mean quarries, fountain, painting, western wadi and low place. Beit Hanina will be getting "Flowers" and "Teachers’ Housing” streets. While West Jerusalem has its share of streets named for flowers, spices, foods or geographic features (for example, Hapisga, or "Summit,” Street in Bayit Vegan is one of the highest streets in the city), most roads in Jewish neighborhoods commemorate famous Jews - historical and religious figures, or people who played a role in the city’s development - or major events in the Israeli history. Haaretz (January 2, 2013)
• The Israeli Occupation authorities continue to assault the family of prisoner Samer al-Issawi who is on hunger strike since 160 days to force him to break the strike. - The Israeli security forces removed over 100 Palestinian protesters from Bab al-Shams village, an impromptu tented community settled in an area of the occupied West Bank that Israel has earmarked for a controversial new settlement. Israeli’s Supreme Court ruled that the Palestinian protest village, built in the geographically sensitive area known as E1, could remain for six days while the issue of the removal of the tents was being discussed. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, in the meantime, ordered those gathered there to be evacuated. The Israeli court allowed for the removal of the protesters even if the tents, for now, will stay. Israeli police and border guard officers entered the compound and told a crowd of around 100 to leave the 20 large, steel-framed tents that were erected a day earlier in an effort to preserve the land for a future Palestinian state. Those protesters who refused to leave were carried down the hill by Israeli officers and detained. Israeli police vans took them to the West Bank town of Ramallah. It’s worth mentioning that six Palestinians having been injured during the evacuation. Palestinian National initiative MP Mustafa Barghouti and eight other community activists were among those detained at the scene. Maannews (January 13, 2013)

- A Palestinian child was moderately injured after being hit by a car driven by an Israeli settler near the Kedar illegal settlement, in occupied East Jerusalem; the settler fled the scene. The Child has been identified as Ali Mousa Al-Jahaleen (7 years), a student at a local school in Arab Al-Jahaleen Bedouin village, in Abu Dis town. IMEMC (January 13, 2013)

- The Israeli Occupation bulldozers demolished a 60 square meters Palestinian house inhabited by 8 family members under the claim it was built without license in Al-Ashqariya neighborhood in Beit Hanina town in the northern of Jerusalem city. The targeted house is owned by Nasser Awad Al-Rajabi (42 years). (Wafa 15 January 2013).

- The Israeli Occupation bulldozers demolished a 2-floors house (100 square meters area) inhabited by 7 family members in Sur Baher town in the eastern of Jerusalem city. The targeted house is owned by ‘Aref Huseen Amirah. (NBPRS & DWG 15 January 2013)

- At least 11 nonviolent peace activists, and 7 reporters, have been injured when the Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) attacked a group of activists trying to reach Bab Al-Shams village in the eastern of Jerusalem city, in the Ma’ale Adumim area. The new village project meant to counter the illegal Israeli E1 settlement plan in the east of Jerusalem city. Several activists have been kidnapped. Several activists were injured in their legs and arms, while one was injured in the chest and another was injured in the head. The army prevented dozens of Palestinian citizens from reaching Bab Al-Shams village but several youths managed to reach it, and the army started firing gas bombs and rubber-coated metal bullets at them, and chased dozens of citizens in the surrounding hills. The IOA also prevented Palestinian ambulances from reaching the area to provide the urgently needed care for wounded citizens, and also prevented dozens of reporters from performing their duties. Two of the wounded reporters have been identified as Nasser Ash Shyukhy and Mahmoud Oleyyan. 22 of the arrested activists have been released at the Hizma roadblock, and more activists are still detained. Dozens of activists managed to reach Bab Al-Shams by staging a fake wedding convoy, and after they were allowed through a military roadblock, they went to the village and started their nonviolent protest. It is worth mentioning that more nonviolent activists are heading to the area determined to enter and rebuilt Bab Al-Shams. Bab Al-Shams activists said that they are determined to return to the Palestinian lands, adding “nothing can stop us”, sending a message to the occupation that this is Palestine and that Palestinians have the right to build and inhabit it. Bab Al-Shams was established in response to the illegitimate Israeli decision to build thousands of Housing units for Jewish settlers in the “E1” area in occupied East Jerusalem, by illegally confiscating thousands of dunums of Palestinian lands. - The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) accompanied by military bulldozers, attacked and demolished Bab Al Shams Palestinian village established by nonviolent activists on Palestinian lands in East Jerusalem, between the Ma’ale Adumim settlement and Jerusalem city. The location of the village is threatened of annexation as Israel considers building a Jewish settlement in the area under the name of "E1 Plan". The IOA removed the tents after sealing the area and declaring it a closed military zone. The army demolished the village after the Israeli High Court cancelled an injunction that prevented the army from demolishing and removing the tents installed by the Palestinians, and issued a decision that granted the army a green light to act against the village and remove it instead of just removing the activists. (IMEMC 17 January 2013)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) stormed Al-A’umari Mosque in Sur Baher town south of Jerusalem city. As a result, clashes erupted between Palestinian citizens and the IOA, where the latter fired teargas and sound bombs at the citizens. Moreover, the IOA summoned 15 Palestinian citizens from the town to interview the Israeli Intelligence Police. (SilwanIC 18 January 2013).

• A group of Palestinian activists established a new tented protest village northwest of Jerusalem, the second such initiative against Israeli settlement building in as many weeks. Activists set up three tents and a small building in the area near Beit Iksa, naming the village al-Karamah (Dignity). Around 400 Palestinians performed Friday prayers in the open area. Activists from across the political spectrum, mainly from nearby villages, have gathered and will sleep in the tents overnight. Beit Iksa, surrounded by Israeli settlements, is set to be entirely encircled by Israel’s separation wall, cutting it off from Jerusalem. Israeli authorities ordered the confiscation of 500 dunums of the village’s land three weeks ago, and do not permit any new building in the town. The Israeli Occupation forces immediately shut down the military checkpoint at the entrance to Beit Iksa to prevent more activists and supporters from accessing the protest site. • The Israeli bulldozers affiliated to the Israeli Antiquities Authority razed 80 dunums of lands and uprooted 50 olive trees in Shufat town northeast of Jerusalem city to lay the infrastructure for the new Israeli road to be constructed on lands of the town, Road 21, which will link between Ramat Shlomo (Reches Shu’fat) settlement and the center of Jerusalem city. The targeted lands are owned by: Abu Nee’, Issa, Abdel
Al, Abu Khdier, Jabir and Abu Jaber families. The two lanes road will extend a length of 6.3 kilometers (3 km to extend on Shufat Town Lands), and is expected to cost NIS 112 million and be completed by January 2015. (SilwanIC 20 January 2013)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded Bab Al Karama Palestinian village, installed by Palestinian activists on lands Israel intends to confiscate in Beit Iksa village northwest of Jerusalem city, and removed all tents and structures. Palestinian activists in Bab Al-Karama (Gate of Dignity) stated that the IOA removed and demolished everything the activists installed, and started forcing them away from the entire area. A large number of Israeli Army, accompanied by military vehicles and bulldozers, invaded the area and removed the structures. The army also continued its siege on the area preventing the residents from reaching Bab Al Karama. The new Palestinian ‘village’ was installed on privately-owned Palestinian lands that belong to citizens of Beit Iksa; the lands are on the area Israeli dubs as E1 where the Netanyahu government intends to build thousands of units for Jewish settlers. - The Israeli Authorities in the West Bank settlement of Kfar Adumim, together with the regional council, are planning construction of an educational complex about a kilometer outside the settlement’s built-up area. Meanwhile, Kfar Adumim officials have been pressing the Civil Administration to demolish a school built without a permit by Bedouin from tires and tents at an encampment about a mile from the proposed education complex. Settlement officials have also sought to have other structures in the Bedouin encampment demolished that have been on the site since before the Jewish settlement was built there in 1979. The Civil Administration has refused to issue a master plan for construction in the area in which the Bedouin have settled, making it impossible to obtain permits for construction at the Bedouin site. The new plans purport to provide regional facilities for citizens of the area, such facilities already exist across the highway at the much larger settlement of Maaleh Adumim. The plans to expand the Jewish settlement are consistent with efforts by the Civil Administration to relocate the Bedouin against their will to other areas, while refusing to allow them to develop in the area where they are currently settled. Over the years, the municipal boundaries of Kfar Adumim have been extended to include about 7,400 dunums. Plans call for construction of the education complex on a 218-duman site, on land registered to the West Bank Palestinian village of Anata. The plans for the education complex were commissioned by the local planning department of the Mateh Binyamin region, and have received the approval of the Civil Administration of the Israel Defense Forces, which has overall jurisdiction in the area. The proposal calls for construction of a hall for public gatherings, sports center, community center, field school, museum and galleries. It also provides for sports equipment for a future regional park. The plans were advertised in the Palestinian media in early December, allowing the public, as required by law, to object to the proposal. In October of last year, the High Court of Justice rejected a petition by Kfar Adumim to have a Bedouin school and other structures in the encampment demolished, but the Civil Administration is continuing to proceed with plans that would call for the demolition of the encampment, including the school built of tires. The plans call for the relocation against their will of the Bedouin of the area, together with other Bedouin in two existing Palestinian villages near the West Bank city of Jericho. The High Court rejected the Bedouin’s claims that they were being unjustly discriminated against in favor of the needs of the Jewish settlers in the area. The court agreed with the state’s position that the Bedouin should be relocated, albeit with their consent if possible. (Haaretz 31 January 2013)

• Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu criticized President Shimon Peres after the latter called him to move forward with Israeli-Palestinian peace negotiations. "Contrary to voices I'm hearing over the last few days, urging me to rush forward, to give up, to withdraw, I think that in a political process one should act responsibly and not in a rush, with a realistic approach and not a hasty one," Netanyahu said. Netanyahu added that it is clear to everyone that "Hamas can take over the Palestinian Authority, that could happen after a settlement and it could happen after a settlement, as it did in Gaza." Netanyahu also stressed that a withdrawal from the West Bank could lead to a third Iranian base in the heart of Israel. "Peace is only achieved once security is guaranteed," Netanyahu said. Though the prime minister did not mention Peres by name, his statements were an apparent response to the presidents' call to renew negotiations with PA President Mahmoud Abbas on Sunday, while speaking in front of one hundred Israeli ambassadors serving around the world, and said that Abbas is a partner for peace. Later on Sunday the Likud-Beiteinu, the joint Knesset list run by Netanyahu and Lieberman, hit back at Peres by releasing an official statement voicing disappointment with the president’s comments and declaring Peres’ political opinion to be "disconnected" from the Israeli public when it comes to negotiations with the Palestinians. "It is very disappointing that the president chooses to express a personal political opinion that is disconnected from the Israeli public's stance regarding Abu Mazen [Abbas], the peace refusenik.” Likud-Beiteinu said in its statement. "It is even more disappointing that the president chose to present before foreign diplomats a political stance that encourages condemnations of Israel in the international community." - Likud’s most far-right figure proposes paying each Palestinian family in West Bank $500,000 to move from the West bank .Several Likud officials called for the annexation of the West Bank, in contradiction with the party's official policy. Despite being instructed by the Likud campaign not to give interviews, Moshe Feiglin made controversial statements during a conference in Jerusalem. The Women in Green conference was attended by several Likud officials who discussed operative ways to impose Israeli sovereignty beyond the Green Line. Feiglin proposed paying Palestinians to leave West Bank. "The State of Israel is paying 10% of its GNP every year for the two-state solution and the Oslo Accords. It's paying for separation fences, Iron Domes and a guard at every café. Soon we'll have to place Iron Domes in every school in Tel Aviv. "With this budget we can give every Arab family in Judea and Samaria (West Bank) $500,000 to encourage it to immigrate to a place with a better future.”. Ynetnews (January 2, 2013)

- According to the Ir Amim association, last year was a record year with regard to construction in the Jerusalem neighborhoods over the Green Line, with tenders for 2,386 apartments issued in 2012 compared to only 726 in 2011. Publication of a tender by the Housing and Construction Ministry or the Israel Lands Administration to solicit bids from contractors is the last stage before earthwork at a site begins, so these numbers reflect actual construction expected in the near to medium term. The government made its medium-to-long term intentions equally clear last year, with a sharp increase in the number of housing units approved by government planning committees, .

According to Ir Amim, 6,932 units were approved for future construction in 2012, compared to 1,772 homes in 2011 and 569 in 2010. The largest building plans were approved for Gilo, Har Homa and Giv'at Hamatos in southern Jerusalem, and Pisgat Ze'ev and Ramat Shlomo in northern Jerusalem. These figures do not include the decision to build in the E-1 area between Jerusalem and Ma'aleh Adumim. The data show that the previous record year for East Jerusalem construction was 2008, under the Olmert government, when 970 units were approved by planning committees and tenders were published for 1,931 homes. The following year, the Netanyahu government’s first, tenders were published for 1,021 homes. The two following years, 2010 and 2011, however, saw a marked slowdown. In 2010, only 506 homes were approved by planning committees for Jerusalem, and in 2011 there were even fewer, 312. Ir Amim (January 3, 2013).

- Israeli Settlers in the Jordan Valley are farming more than 5,000 dunums (1,250 acres) of private Palestinian land located between the border fence and the actual border with Jordan. They received the land from the World Zionist Organization in the 1980s. The original owners, some of whom fled in 1967 and returned to the West Bank after the signing of the 1993 Oslo Accords and the 1994 peace treaty with Jordan, are still not allowed to access the land because of a military order preventing them from entering the border area. After the Israel Defense Forces entered the West Bank in 1967, it issued Order 151, which defined the area near the Jordanian border as a closed military area. Later, the border fence was erected, which in some places is up to two kilometers from the Jordan River, the natural border of the Jordanian kingdom. Until 1994, the area was completely abandoned, including the ancient churches in the area, because of a large number of minefields in the region. At the beginning of the 1980s, the government decided to encourage farmers to work the fields in the area to create a buffer zone along the border and prevent infiltration from Jordan. The WZO was given the private Palestinian land and leased it to the settlers. In July 1987 then-general in charge of Central Command, Amram Mitzna, instructed the brigade commander in the sector to prevent Palestinians from entering the area. A document from then that Haaretz has obtained states: "There is no doubt that from a security standpoint, it is unthinkable to let someone who is not part of the security forces or an armed veteran enters the area." The situation was never reexamined or changed, even after Oslo and the peace treaty with Jordan, said IDF sources. Today, Thai workers from the Israeli settlements are allowed across the border fence into the area, while the Palestinians are not. The amount of land farmed has increased 110 percent in recent years. Based on aerial photographs from the IDF, the amount of land farmed in 1997 was 2,380 dunums, while in 2012 this reached 5,064 dunums. Most of the land is planted with date orchards, a particularly profitable business. The WZO said that only state land or that defined as "absentee property" is being farmed. Absentee property is the legal term for land belonging to Palestinians who fled the region in 1967 and did not return. A source in the IDF Central Command said that much of the land being farmed is privately owned by Palestinians. While many Palestinians returned to the region after 1994, the WZO and IDF have made no efforts to determine if any of the absentee property owners are among those who returned, and there are no maps showing which land in the area belongs to whom. The IDF spokesman said the matter would be checked. The head of the Jordan Valley Regional Council, David Alhayani, said all the land was being farmed with the permission of the WZO. Haaretz (January 3, 2013).

- Israel recently renewed restrictions on the freedom of movement of foreign nationals who live and work in the West Bank that prohibit them from entering East Jerusalem or Israel. The changes were discovered when foreigners learned, after renewing their tourist visas that the words "Judea and Samaria" only had been stamped inside. Citizens from these countries who come to live in Israel or Jewish settlements in the West Bank are not subjected to these restrictions. Some of these individuals are Palestinians who were born in the West Bank and whose residency status was rescinded by Israel prior to 1994 due to their prolonged residence abroad. Others are married to Palestinians, while still others work in the West Bank, often as university teachers. The renewed restriction in its new version ("Judea and Samaria only") was instituted on November 1, 2012. On that date it was applied to all foreign nationals of Palestinian origin, and subsequently to non-Palestinians. For example, in the case of one American couple, the woman’s visa was extended before November 1 and was not stamped with "Judea and Samaria only.” The man’s visa was extended after November 1 and did bear that stamp. The new stamps also appear to be employed only when passports are brought in for visa renewal. Haaretz (January 3, 2013)

- The Israeli Supreme Court has ordered the state to evacuate the largest unauthorized outpost in the West Bank, Amona, by the end of April. The justices did not give reasons for their decision but ordered the state to provide a situation update by March and ordered the residents to submit a position paper outlining their stance. The order for the state to brief the court in March appears to be an effort to learn whether the state and outpost residents will come to an agreement on a peaceful evacuation and how many structures would be demolished. The decision was made by a three-judge panel led by Supreme Court President Asher Grunis. The court had initially required that the outpost be evacuated by the end of 2012, but in November the state requested a six-month deferral. In its ruling on Sunday, the court consented to a four-month extension. Amona, which is in the northern West Bank between Jerusalem and Nablus, was established in 1995 on a hill overlooking the settlement of Ofra. It is largely built on land owned by Palestinians. Over the years, trailers and other light structures have been set up there, although courts have issued demolition orders. In 2006, in response to a petition by Peace Now, the state demolished nine houses at the outpost. Hundreds of people trying to stop the demolitions were injured in clashes with police. Currently about 50 homes remain there, in addition to a religious boys’ school, a winery and other buildings. Haaretz (January 3, 2013).

- A Palestinian prisoner being held in an Israeli jail has suffered irreparable damage to his vocal cords as a result of medical negligence, losing the ability to speak. Mahmoud Hamdi Shabaneh, 40, from Hebron is being held under administrative detention in Israel's Negev prison. Israeli prison authorities repeatedly ignored his medical condition, thought to be an infection in his vocal chords, leading Shabaneh to lose the ability to speak. Maannews (January 5, 2013)

- Netanyahu delays E1 construction plans. Despite statements asserting building in contested area will forge on; PM hesitates to approve projects after declaring his support for the controversial E1 area construction plans in December 2012, it appears that Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is hesitating to realize the plans. The controversial building plans underwent several changes since Netanyahu’s statement. Their blueprints were approved by the Defense Minister Ehud Barak, but the Prime Minister’s Office then ordered not to file them with the zoning committee at this time. In mid December 2012 the prime minister instructed the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories to step up the plans' promotion, and a special hearing was held at the Civil Administration's planning committee, in which two plans, for more than 3,000 housing units were approved. The plans' realization now depends on the political echelon's decision – which is still forthcoming. Ynetnews (January 5, 2013)

- Ma'aleh Adumim mayor Benny Kashriel urges Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, to sign the plans for 3,500 housing units in E1, an empty area in Ma'ale Adumim. After waiting for 18 years, Kashriel was given permission to deposit the plans before the Higher Planning Council of Judea and Samaria last month. But the council passed the plans back to the city for revisions. The city has since made the necessary technical corrections, but Netanyahu’s signature is needed in order to deposit the plans again with the council. The decision on E1 was a direct response to the United Nations General Assembly decision to upgrade the status of the Palestinian delegation to that of an observer nonmember state. Israel has insisted that development of E1 does not harm the two-state solution and that it is understood that Ma’aleh Adumim and E1 would be part of Israel in any final-status agreement with the Palestinians. Ma’aleh Adumim residents believe that it is important that Netanyahu sign those plans before the elections, or risk losing the support of Likud voters in that city. JPOST (January 6, 2013)

- Netanyahu receives letters from more than 700 Jewish clergy protesting settlement expansion. More than 700 letters drafted by Jewish rabbis, cantors, and rabbinical students around the world express fears the E-1 plans will be 'final blow to a peaceful solution' and also voice concern that it 'damages the critical relationship between Israel and the United States.' A group of American rabbinical students studying in Israel delivered a stack of over 700 letters to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu’s office in Jerusalem. Signed by rabbis, cantors, as well as rabbinical and cantorial students from around the world, the letter was written in protest of Israel’s recently announced plans to expand construction in the E-1 area of the West Bank. The letter, a joint initiative undertaken by Rabbis for Human Rights-North America, J Street, and Americans for Peace Now, is an attempt to inform Netanyahu of concern over settlement expansion among Jewish spiritual leaders outside Israel. The letter affirmed the leaders’ commitment to Israel, stating that “all of us believe that the ultimate safety and security of Israel as a Jewish state will depend on reaching a peace agreement that also allows Palestinians to live safely and securely in their own state, we fear that building settlements in E1 would be the final blow to a peaceful solution. If Israel builds in E1, it will cut East Jerusalem off from its West Bank surroundings and effectively bifurcate the West Bank. In doing so, E1 will literally represent an obstacle to a two-state solution.” Haaretz (January 7, 2013)

- Settler council lied to High Court to prevent West Bank outpost evacuation. The Gush Etzion Regional Council provided false affidavit claiming families were dwelling in four structures built without permits in the illegal Sde Boaz outpost; evacuating a family in place is legally much more complicated than preventing one from being inhabited. The Gush Etzion Regional Council provided Israel’s High Court with a fraudulent affidavit which states that illegally-built structures were inhabited and thus interim injunctions which would implement their destruction cannot be filed. The appeal regards four structures built without permits at the Sde Boaz outpost, next to the Neve Daniel settlement. A group of Palestinian residents from the Al-Khader village petitioned the High Court in December 2012, demanding the access road to the area be destroyed, since it encroaches on their private property. They have also requested the four structures be demolished and an interim injunction issued that bars any further construction. In a response to the High court issued last week, the Gush Etzion Regional Council, represented by Attorney Akiva Silvetski, claimed these are state lands that have not yet been officially declared as such. They claim that the four structures have been populated by four families, and provided an affidavit to support the claim by Dov Barak, the council’s land coordinator. Barak testified that he was on the land at the time and that the structures were indeed inhabited. The question of whether the structures were inhabited is critical to the interim injunction against their construction, since evacuating a family that already lives in a structure is legally much more complicated than preventing one from being inhabited. For this reason, Supreme Court Justice Zvi Zilbertal issued a temporary injunction that bars anyone from inhabiting the structures in the outpost. Haaretz (January 7, 2013)

- PeaceNow movement denounced the Israeli government’s decision to approve two outposts, Rechalim and Nofei Nehmiya, and to declare them as new settlements in total violation to the Quartet’s Road Map
according to the organization. Hagit Ofran, the spokeswoman for the organization, stated that several months ago the government decided to approve three outposts (Rechalim, Sinsanah and Bruchin), adding that “although the Government decision did not mention the Nofei Nehmiya outpost, it turned out that the boundaries of the new settlement of Rechalim includes the outpost of Nofei Nehmiya which is located nearly 2 km west of Rechalim, as a “neighborhood” of Rechalim.” According to the Quartet’s Road Map, which Israel is internationally committed to, Israel is obliged to dismantle all of the outposts that were established after March 2001. Nofei Nehmiya is the fourth outpost that was established after 2001 that the government is now authorizing, she added. She stated that settlement is considered today the biggest problem for “Israel”, noting that there are 100 outposts in the West Bank, where Rechalim outpost was evacuated in October, 2002, but the settlers returned to it in February, 2003. Peace Now (January 8, 2013)

- Netanyahu visits West Bank settlement of Rechalim, Ariel University, touting his record as a champion of the settlement movement. Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu pledged that the West Bank settlement of Ariel would always be part of Israel. “Ariel will always remain under Israeli sovereignty,” he said to resounding applause in the small packed auditorium at Ariel University, located 16 kilometers over the pre-1967 lines. With two weeks to go until the elections, Netanyahu braved the drenching rain to travel from Jerusalem to the West Bank’s Samaria region and tout his record as a champion of the settlement movement. There, he visited two places that he helped legitimize during his premiership over the last four years: Ariel University, which received its long-sought accreditation as the country’s eighth university just last month; and Rechalim, one of three outposts legally recognized as settlements this year. But it was only last week that the IDF established Rechalim’s official boundaries, which also include the outpost of Nofei Nehemia. His visit comes as his Likud Beytenu list is losing support to the pro-settlement Bayit Yehudi Party, particularly among settlers. Israel Hayom (January 9, 2013)

- Israel to market East Jerusalem housing project before election Plans for the project, which involves 1,500 homes over the Green Line, were approved last month by the National Planning and Building Council, causing tension between Jerusalem and the West. The Israeli government and the Jerusalem municipality are hard at work on the goal of offering for sale 1,500 housing units in Ramat Shlomo settlement before the January 22 elections. Plans for the project, which is over the Green Line, were approved last month by the Israeli National Planning and Building Council, causing tension between Jerusalem and the West. The Housing and Construction Ministry, Israel Lands Administration and Jerusalem municipality are trying to dramatically short-circuit the issuing of construction tenders for the project so they can start marketing the prospective homes within 10 days. Government officials confirmed that efforts to do so were underway, but estimate they have a low chance of coming to fruition for legal, technical and policy reasons. The efforts to market the 1,500 units in the ultra-Orthodox Ramat Shlomo settlement are being led by Housing and Construction Minister Ariel Atias, alongside Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat. Also on the agenda are the construction plans, also being promoted by the Jerusalem municipality, for 800 housing units in Gilo in south Jerusalem, but the chances of them coming to pass before the election are even lower. These plans are in addition to the approval of 3,000 housing units in the West Bank over the past few weeks by Defense Minister Ehud Barak. Haaretz (January 10, 2013)

- Israel is investing in West Bank 'national heritage sites by adding a handicapped access to the Tomb of the Patriarchs (Al Ibrahimi Mosque) in Hebron. The Israeli government says it is moving forward on a plan to invest in places it considers part of Israel's national heritage, including nine West Bank sites. Israeli Cabinet Secretary Tzvi Hauser says Israel is adding handicapped access to the Tomb of the Patriarchs (The Ibrahimi Mosque) in the city of Hebron. The announcement comes a week before Israeli elections and could appeal to hard-line voters. In 2010, Benjamin Netanyahu's government was considering a five-year plan costing NIS 500 million to renovate and preserve national heritage and infrastructure sites, in an attempt to strengthen ties between global Jewry and Israel's historical and Zionist legacy. Rough details of the plan were first revealed by Haaretz a month beforehand, and Netanyahu paid it special attention in his address to the Herzliya Conference several weeks before. "The guarantee of Israel's continued existence lies not only in weapons systems, or in the strength of our army, or in our economic strength and inventiveness, our exports, or in any of the other crucial factors," Netanyahu told the conference. (Haaretz 15 January 2013).

- Israel Defense Forces released data about combat soldiers according to place of residence shows that West Bank settlements have the highest rate of conscripts in fighting units. The data, which looked at men born in 1991, revealed that of the five regional councils with the highest rate of soldiers in combat units, three are in the West Bank. Beit El leads the list with more than 86 percent combat soldiers, followed by Elyachin with 81 percent. Efrata is third (80.4), then Upper Galilee (79 ), and finally South Hebron Hills with 74.4 percent of all men born in 1991 joining combat units. These figures might flatter the settlements, due to the relatively small total number of conscripts, but still, 62 percent of all settlement conscripts choose combat units. The figure for Jerusalem is also high - 54 percent, compared to the national average of 45.3 percent. The IDF differentiated between the central area and the Dan district, with the former including Rishon Letzion, Netanya, Petah Tikva, Rehovot, Kfar Sava and other cities, and the latter including Tel Aviv, Holon, Bat Yam, Herzliya, Ramat Gan, Bnei Brak and Ramat Hasharon. The central district had 46 percent combat conscripts, while the Dan district's percentage was 36. The Haifa and Southern district both had a 41 percent rate. Regarding soldiers taking officer training courses, the IDF data showed higher income cities and towns accounting for the highest percentages, with Efrata regional council leading with 22.2 percent, followed Oranit (19 ), Zvulun (16.7 ), Jezreel Valley (15 ) and Shoham (14.9 ). (Haaretz 16 January 2013)

- Approval for settlement plans jumped 300% in 2012, says Peace Now Report; the Israeli NGO says 1,747 new settler homes built in 2012; more than 300 built without permits. The number of approvals for home construction plans in the settlements leaped in 2012 compared with the two previous years. Building plans for 6,676 residential units were approved in 2012, the vast majority in settlements east of the fence. This represents a huge increase from 1,607 housing units approved for construction in 2011 and the several hundred housing units approved in 2010. Among the housing construction plans approved were 3,500 residential units intended for the E-1 corridor, 523 for the new settlement of Gevaot and more than 500 in Itamar. Construction began on 1,747 new housing units in West Bank settlements last year. More than a third of the construction in the settlements was east of the West Bank separation fence, according to the Peace Now report. Four new outposts went up in 2012: Nahlei Tal near the Palestinian city of Ramallah, Tzofin Tzafon (Tzofin North) near the Palestinian city of Qalqilyah, Nahalat Yosef near Nablus and Hill 573 as part of an expansion of the Itamar settlement. Altogether, 317 new housing units were built in settlement outposts without building permits, which is against the law. (PeaceNow 16 January 2013)

- As part of Landmarks plan, Israel's heritage sites will soon appear on Waze navigation application for smartphones. Eight projects already completed. The Prime Minister's Office is planning to build a 25-meter (82-foot) replica of King Herod's tomb at the Herodium site near Bethlehem as part of its Landmarks plan to invest in Israel's national heritage sites. The plan also includes the establishment in Jerusalem of an Albert Einstein museum in the shape of the famed scientist's brain... and the marking of all Israel’s national heritage sites on the Waze navigation application as well as Google Maps. The Herod’s tomb project, which will cost around 2 million shekels ($540,000), is among more than 300 projects that are part of the Landmarks plan, which was initiated by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu three years ago. Some 350 million shekels ($94 million) have been budgeted for these projects, an amount that will be doubled through a matching private donation system. The Landmarks plan is meant to be implemented over a seven-year span, and Netanyahu intends to continue with it if he is re-elected as prime minister in the Jan. 22 election. Eight Landmarks projects have already been completed, including the upgrade of Independence Hall in Tel Aviv, the restoration of the windmill in Jerusalem’s Mishkenot Shaananim neighborhood, the rehabilitation of the burial site of Yitzhak Ben-Tzvi, Israel’s second and longest-serving president, and the renovation of the moat at David’s Citadel in Jerusalem’s Old City. Other completed projects include the gathering of around 60,000 personal items from the Holocaust and the collection and digitalization of private historical photos of the land of Israel. Future projects include an Albert Einstein museum in Jerusalem that will be designed by British architect Norman Foster (Israel Hayom 16 January 2013)

- The current government, led by Benjamin Netanyahu, took office on March 31, 2009. In the period since, its policies and actions in the West Bank and East Jerusalem disclose a clear intention to use settlements to systematically undermine and render impossible a realistic, viable two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. These policies and actions include: 1) Construction, tenders, approval of future construction, and planning for future construction in settlements located deep inside the West Bank, east of the approved route of Israel’s separation barrier; 2) A record level of tenders, approval of future construction, and planning for future construction in settlements in East Jerusalem; 3) Construction, tenders, approval of future construction, and planning for future construction in settlements in both the West Bank and East Jerusalem whose location renders their expansion especially problematic if not devastating to a future peace agreement; 4) Adopting a formal policy that favors “legalizing” illegal settlement construction – leading both to additional illegal construction and new illegal outposts, and to the establishment of new settlements for the first time in decades. 5) Preferential funding for settlers and settlements, including funding projects intended to build support among Israelis for keeping settlements – including settlements deep inside the West Bank – as a permanent part of Israel. (Peace Now 16 January 2013)
Israel’s High Court rejected an appeal to release hunger striking Palestinian prisoner Tariq Qaadan, who is being held without charge or trial. Qaadan, from Jenin, was sentenced to administrative detention by an Israeli military court and has been on hunger strike for 50 days. Qaadan and fellow hunger strikers Jafar Azzidine and Yousef Yassin were all detained on Nov. 22 and sentenced to administrative detention. They are only drinking water and have refused medical treatment or tests since Dec. 21, 2012. The Israeli prison service is denying them family visits and has confiscated most of their belongings. High Court to state: Don’t evict Palestinians from south Hebron firing zone. State says area where 8 Palestinian villages lie is vital to army training; Justice Joubran gives state 60 days to respond to petition Israel’s High Court of Justice ordered the state to refrain from evicting Palestinians living in an area of the West Bank that the Israel Defense Forces has designated a firing zone, pending further decision on the matter. Justice Salim Joubran issued a temporary injunction forbidding the state from embarking on "the forced removal of the petitioners and their families", and gave it 60 days to respond to a petition against former Defense Minister Ehud Barak’s July 2012 decision to expel the residents of the eight villages from their homes in the southern Hebron hills known to the IDF as Firing Zone 918. Barak had decided to evict the residents on the grounds that the area is vital to army training. The IDF has said that there are no permanent residents in the area. (Haaretz 17 January 2013)

One of the pillars of Naftali Bennett’s platform is his plan for addressing the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, a plan the star of this election campaign calls "The Stability Initiative," which simply calls for Israel to annex Area C of the West Bank. Under the Oslo Accords, Area C was placed under full Israeli civil and security control. To stave off accusations of apartheid, Bennett proposes giving Israeli citizenship to nearly 50,000 Palestinians living in the annexed territories. That would supposedly expand Israel's borders at a negligible demographic cost. But is Bennett correct in saying that only 50,000 Arabs live in Area C? An appendix to his plan lists the Palestinian villages in Area C and the population of each (where applicable). In the margins, Bennett writes that the figures were accurate as of 2007. A quick check reveals that Bennett’s data is taken from a comprehensive report on Israeli planning policy in Area C that was issued in 2008 by the NGO Bimkom – Planners for Human Rights. In fact, a significant portion of Bennett’s plan, as outlined in "The Israel Stability Initiative: A Practical Program for Managing the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict," is based on a table that was copied – in its entirety – from the Bimkom report, titled "The Prohibited Zone." But the name that Bennett applies to this table does not reflect the data it contains. The table includes only those Palestinian villages whose entire built-up area falls inside Area C. But there are some 200 villages that are partly in Area C and partly in Areas A or B of the West Bank. When the Oslo Accords were signed, the Palestinian cities of the West Bank were within Area B, but since then some of them have expanded into Area C. Including the population in these areas would add around 100,000 people to the 47,360 cited in Bennett's table. In the appendix to Bennett's plan, it also says that the list of Arab communities in Area C and their populations was correct as of 2007, and "in our estimation there has been no change to that number." But in fact, the annual estimated natural population growth of 4 percent would add nearly 60,000 to Bennett's figures. (Haaretz 17 January 2013)

- Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu declared that any future Government under his chairmanship would not evacuate any of the Israeli settlements in the West Bank. He stated: "our position is clear and we will not evacuate any of the settlements, but will support the establishment of settlements, until we have approval to build the first University in Ariel, and face all the international pressure. This statement, as a kind of propaganda for the party "Likud" in the midst of the Israeli elections, Netanyahu seeks to stay in the premiership. He also rejected the idea of freezing construction in the settlements. (Wattan 19 January 2013)

- Israeli Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, stated that he totally rejects that idea of establishing a Palestinian state, and spoke of a "sort of autonomy for the Palestinians". He also said that Israel will continue to build settlements in the occupied West Bank, and in occupied East Jerusalem. "I do not want the Palestinians to become Israeli citizens", Netanyahu said, "I don’t want to control them either". In a Televised interview with the Walla Israeli News, Netanyahu said that Israel will have to reach a sort of an understanding “granting the Palestinians some sort of a disarmed authority”. He strongly rejected any sort of Palestinian “entity” in this current stage, and said that “Israel needs to know what it can do; Abu Mazin (Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas) is hugging Hamas, the same group that calls for our annihilation”. As for Israel’s illegal settlement construction and expansion activities, Netanyahu said that a government under his command will never evict any settlement. “I never removed a single settlement, and I don’t intend to remove any”, he added, “We removed the settlers from Gaza, and look what happened; I will never do such a thing”. The Israeli Prime Minister further stated that Israel will not evict settlements under any peace agreement with the Palestinians, and added that the settlement blocs of Gush Etzion, Ariel and Ma’ale Adumim will always be part of Israel. He also said that his government does not only build within the boundaries of the existing settlements in the West Bank and occupied Jerusalem, but wherever it can. As for smaller settlements not located within settlement blocs, Netanyahu said that this issue will be determined in negotiations, but also said that he will never evict any settlement as long as he is leading Israel. (IMEMC 21 January 2013)

- Right-wing politician Naftali Bennett’s plan to annex Israeli-controlled parts of the West Bank is just the logical next step in Israel’s historic effort to ghettoize the Palestinians. When Habayit Hayehudi party leader and rising political star Naftali Bennett calls for annexing Area C, the part of the West Bank under full Israeli security and civil control, he is following the logic of every single Israeli government: maximize the territory, minimize the Arabs. According to Bennett, about 60 percent of the West Bank - a.k.a. Area C - is annexable. What’s important about Area C is not whether 50,000 Palestinians live there, as democratic, benevolent Bennett claims, while suggesting to naturalize them and grant them Israeli citizenship, or whether the number is around 150,000 (as Chaim Levinson stated this week). Don’t worry. Even if there are 300,000 Palestinians living in Area C and all of them agree to become citizens, the Israeli bureaucracy will find ways to embitter their lives (the way it does the lives of the Bedouin in the Negev), revoke their citizenship (the way it does the residency status of Palestinians in East Jerusalem) and leave them without the little share of their land they still have (the way it did to the Palestinian citizens of Israel within the 1948 borders). Bennett added that Area C is a tremendous success of Israeli policy and its implementers, the army and the Civil Administration. (Haaretz 21 January 2013)

- At least 166 homes in Israeli settlement built on private Palestinian land. A certified map of the West Bank settlement of Eli, drafted by the Civil Administration to clarify what lands could be included in zoning plan for settlement, which reveals the houses were built on Palestinian property. At least 166 houses in the West Bank settlement of Eli were constructed on private Palestinian land, a recent survey by the Civil Administration revealed. Eli was established in 1984 between Ramallah and Nablus, and within years it expanded into one of the larger settlements in the West Bank, reaching nine hilltops and widening its control over thousands of dunums of land. Despite its growth, the settlement never had a legally approved urban plan - one plan that had been promoted in the past was halted due to its incursion on to private property. Houses in Eli could thus not be issued legal building permits, which led to several petitions being filed at the High Court of Justice. Following pressure from the settlers, the government began working on a zoning plan for the settlement, which in turn led to comprehensive mapping by the Civil Administration to clarify what lands could be included in the plan. The survey also included aerial photographs dating back to 1970. It should be noted that land in this area was never officially registered, and that ownership is dictated by Ottoman law, which determines that any land farmed for a period of 10 years is considered the legal property of its cultivator. - The army has been carrying out training exercises for about a week near three Palestinian villages in south Hebron, in violation of a High Court of Justice order that also forbids the villagers' eviction from their homes. The farmers of a-Tabban, Mirkez and Jinba reported that military drills in a "firing zone" adjacent to their villages started on January 21 2013 with no warning, damaging their fields, pasture areas and wells. ACRI association petitioned the High Court on the farmers' behalf to stop the Israel Defense Forces from "holding drills that could hinder the petitioners and their families in farming their lands, taking their herds to pasture and carrying on with their normal life." The petitioners also asked the court to compel the IDF and defense minister to enforce the interim injunction issued on January 16, which forbade the farmers' eviction, and to fine the army and defense minister for contempt of court. The farmers said military vehicles trampled their cultivated fields during the drills and dug trenches, making it difficult for them to access their grazing lands and fields and even to enter the villages. They also said the shooting near their homes was frightening the residents, especially the children. (Haaretz 29 January 2013)

- Israeli prosecutors will explain to the High Court of Justice why it's hard to protect two elderly people from attacks by young Jews. The Israel Defense Forces and the Israeli police in the West Bank will continue trying to convince the High Court of Justice that the routine of fear in which two elderly farmers live due to attacks by settlers is reasonable and proportionate. In the name of the IDF and the Israel Police, the State Prosecutor’s Office will try to convince justices Asher Grunis, Esther Hayut and Neal Hendel not to be overly shocked by the descriptions by Rabbis for Human Rights attorneys Quamar Mishirqi-Assad and Avital Sharon. At issue are the attacks on brothers Hammad and Mohammed al-Sleibi, age 78 and 70, from the village of Safa southwest of Bethlehem. The state will ask that the petition on behalf of the two brothers be rejected, as well as the request that the West Bank law-enforcement authorities protect the welfare, property and work of the brothers and their descendants. For about 50 years, the brothers have been making a living from a 45-dunam plot in Wadi Abu Rish west of the village of Beit Omar. The settlement of Bat Ayin sits on top of a hill about 200 meters from the plot, which is abundant with trees and vines: olives, grapes, dates, apricots, plums, quince, peaches, pomegranates, loquats and almonds. In September 2005, about 300 goats and their shepherds heading from the settlement entered the plot. In a complaint to the police, the brothers reported damage to their crops, both by the goats and the shepherds’ sticks. They expected protection. Instead, in the following eight months, their trees were damaged at least five times, and the two men were attacked with stones and injured. In 2007, young men heading from the settlement beat Hammad al-Sleibi with an iron rod and stones. (Haaretz 29 January 2013)

- Israeli Foreign Ministry video about religious diversity in Jerusalem features potentially offensive image depicting collapse of Islam’s holy site. Image replaced; video now includes fairy dust, time travel. The Foreign Ministry created an elaborate video titled The Truth about Jerusalem, in which Deputy Foreign Minister Danny Ayalon presents Israel’s capital as a diverse and pluralistic city. In the video, Ayalon walks around an amalgam of contemporary Jerusalem streets and an animated fantasy version of historic Jerusalem. As he narrates the history of the Israeli capital, the deputy foreign minister presents the narrative of the Jewish people in connection with its link to Jerusalem. The video stresses the fact that under Israeli sovereignty, the three monotheistic religions – Judaism, Christianity and Islam – enjoy much greater freedom of religion than was allowed under any other reign over Jerusalem in the history of the holy city. In the backdrop of such descriptions of diversity and tolerance, as well as images of cultural events, scientific discoveries and overjoyed residents, the animation features a collapsing Dome of the Rock, from the ruins of which rises the Jewish Holy Temple. When the video was presented to the Foreign Ministry, many were apprehensive, as they feared that the segment may be misinterpreted causing offense to the Muslim population. As a result, the ministry decided to replace the segment with a fantasy-like illustration of the Temple Mount, as a timepiece indicates a return to the ninth century BC. The Holy Temple is seen gradually being erected indicating that before the Dome of the Rock was built, the Jewish structure was the main site at the Temple Mount. (Ynetnews 31 January 2013)

- The United Nations says Israel must withdraw all of its citizens from the regions of Judea and Samaria. The recommendation came in a report issued Thursday by the U.N. Human Rights Council, which has a history of passing numerous resolutions condemning Israel for various alleged ‘crimes’ each year. "Israel must, in compliance with Article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, cease all settlement activities without preconditions," the report said in part. "It must immediately initiate a process of withdrawal of all settlers from the occupied Palestinian territories." (INN 31 January 2013)
