- Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat announced that he intends to promote the establishment of a new Jewish settlement in East Jerusalem. About 200 new homes are being planned for the new neighborhood, known as Kidmat Zion, on a plot of land claimed to be purchased by U.S. millionaire Irving Moskowitz, a longtime patron of Jewish settlers in East Jerusalem. That step is expected to come if and when the planning budget for the new neighborhood is approved during one of the next meetings of the Knesset Finance Committee. Kidmat Zion lies between the East Jerusalem Palestinian towns of Abu Dis and Jabal Mukkaber, close to the separation wall. The location is considered one of the most sensitive in East Jerusalem, due to its proximity to the building designated as the future home of the Palestinian parliament and its distance from other Jewish neighborhoods. The land is claimed to be purchased by ultra-Orthodox Jews from Mea She'arim around the turn of the 20th century, and by Moskowitz over the past few decades for the Ateret Cohanim association, an organization which brought in a number of Jewish families, who live alongside Palestinian families. Haaretz (April 3, 2012).

- The Head of the Committee for the Defense of Silwan, Fakhri Abu Diab revealed about a new settlement outpost located below the seven arches hotel at the foot of the Mount of Olives / Al-Tur overlooking the Al-Aqsa Mosque and the Old City of Jerusalem. Abu Diab indicated that that the security of the occupation was running a limited number of offices in this region, but turned in complete secrecy and by night work to a complete outpost located in the most sensitive areas in Jerusalem. Al Quds Media (April 4, 2012).

An Israeli right-wing activist published an ad last week, calling for the aid of fellow activists in securing a court-ordered evacuation of a Palestinian family from its East Jerusalem home, following the police's refusal to do so. Israel Land Fund founder and director Aryeh King, is claiming that the 18-member Palestinian family illegally entered a housing compound in 2002, despite the fact that it was purchased by a British Jew about years 30 ago. Ruling on the case, a Jerusalem magistrate's court ordered the house be evacuated by March 1, saying the Palestinian family had to pay NIS 125,000 in damages. According to King, the evacuation was set to take place on the date issued by the court, and in coordination with the police, until he received a call from the police's legal advisor, who indicated that the operation was canceled following the order of Jerusalem District Commander Niso Shaham. King intimated that the police advisor said that the order to cancel was given since the evacuation was to take part a day prior to a meeting between Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and U.S. President Barack Obama, which could bring about "unfavorable headlines. An Israeli right-wing activist published an ad last week, calling for the aid of fellow activists in securing a court-ordered evacuation of a Palestinian family (Suleiman family) from its East Jerusalem home, following the police's refusal to do so. Israel Land Fund founder and director Aryeh King, is claiming that the 18-member Palestinian family illegally entered a housing compound in 2002, despite the fact that it was purchased by a British Jew about years 30 ago. Ruling on the case, a Jerusalem magistrate's court ordered the house be evacuated by March 1, saying the Palestinian family had to pay NIS 125,000 in damages. According to King, the evacuation was set to take place on the date issued by the court, and in coordination with the police, until he received a call from the police's legal advisor, who indicated that the operation was canceled following the order of Jerusalem District Commander Niso Shaham. King intimated that the police advisor said that the order to cancel was given since the evacuation was to take part a day prior to a meeting between Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and U.S. President Barack Obama, which could bring about "unfavorable headlines." Following that cancellation, King appealed the state for an alternative date, with March 30 surfacing as the evacuations new timeslot. However, despite what King describes as repeated requests, the police has not responded to his demand to secure the evacuation. In response, King published an ad last week, stating: "Strong men are wanted to legally evacuate Arab squatters, after Niso Shaham announced he won't allow for the evacuation to take place – the Jews will do it without the police's aid." Haaretz (April 3, 2012).

- The Israeli Defense Forces has issued an eviction order for settlers who took over a house in the Arab part of Hebron last week. According to the order, the settlers have until Tuesday at 3:00 PM to evacuate the house on their own will, after which "the authorities will act to restore the building to its previous state." The security establishment has called the takeover a provocation, and says that the settlers' presence in the house constitutes a public disturbance. However, the move has won the support of some politicians. The settlers said they purchased the property legally. Their representatives showed records of the deal, including money transfers, to Military Advocate General staff. The house is located in a closed military zone, but Jewish community activists come and go freely through the area. Haaretz (April 3, 2012).
- Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu told his cabinet that he is working to legalize the Ulpana neighborhood in the settlement of Beit El in the West Bank, along with three other illegal outposts in the territory. Netanyahu's comments come against the backdrop of a fierce government rift surrounding the evacuation order of settlers from a house in a Palestinian neighborhood in Hebron. The state had previously committed to evacuate the Ulpana outpost by May, but Netanyahu informed the cabinet that he had asked the Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein to find a solution that would legalize the outpost and prevent its demolition. Netanyahu said that in the near future, following the recommendations of Defense Minister Ehud Barak, he will ask the government to legalize the status of three other settlements in the West Bank Bruchin, Sansana, and Rachalim. Haaretz (April 4, 2012).
- Shortly after the High Court of Justice rebuked the government for contempt of court for failing to evacuate the illegal outpost of Migron, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is back to his old habits since he told Defense Minister Ehud Barak not to carry out an evacuation order for a new settlement that was set up in the heartland of the Palestinian population in Hebron. Netanyahu is ignoring the West Bank military prosecutor's opinion, which stipulates that the settlers' presence threatens to disrupt the delicate status quo between the Israeli and Palestinian communities. In addition to warning of violence, the opinion stresses that the law in Judea and Samaria prohibits seizing real estate without the authorities' approval. The law states that even if the settlers bought the property, they may not use it without a permit from the Civil Administration. Netanyahu's inappropriate intervention shows he does not understand that the law in Hebron is not the law in Tel Aviv. Haaretz (April 4, 2012).

- building a Jewish neighborhood in the Shepherd Hotel compound in East Jerusalem, on land which they claim to own, thus paving the way for the extremist Moskowitz to establish yet another disputed neighborhood. Fifteen years ago, in Netanyahu's previous term as prime minister, (under pressure from the American administration) he ordered the settlers to evacuate Ras al Amud, a neighborhood Moskowitz had started building in East Jerusalem. Netanyahu maintained the evacuation "serves the unity of the holy city, the nation's unity and the continuation of the peace process." Alarmingly, the settlers' influence on the government has overpowered these interests. If Barak gives in yet again to the thugs and their political patrons, he will be accomplice to trampling peace and prostituting the rule of law. Haaretz (April 4, 2012).
- The Israeli Housing Ministry official allegedly behind state funding and assistance given to the Migron outpost in 2002-3 will not face criminal charges, after the State Prosecutor closed the case in January. Yair Rafaeli headed the Housing and Construction Ministry's Jerusalem district in 2002-2003. In those years, the illegal outpost Migron received massive government support, consisting of a plan to construct 500 housing units, pave a road, build sewage and electricity infrastructures, among other things. Haaretz obtained documents showing that Rafaeli had spurred and urged his office staff to assist the outpost. Following attorney Talia Sasson's report of March 2005, which detailed the state's involvement in setting up illegal outposts, police launched an investigation into the procedure leading to Migron's establishment. Rafaeli was the primary suspect in the case. In 2007 the case was passed to the State Prosecutor's Office, where it gathered dust for several years. In recent years police opened several criminal inquiries into illegal construction in the outposts, involving forged documents and illegal building permits and money transfers. All the inquiries were closed without pressing charges. An investigation into the construction of 50 buildings without permits in the Shiloh settlement is now taking place. The Justice Ministry commented on Monday, "The case was closed in January 2012. It took a long time to deal with the case due to its complexity. Finally it was decided to scrap it due to lack of evidence against some of the suspects, and due to lack of public interest regarding others." Haaretz (April 4, 2012).

- The Prosecutor for the International Criminal Court in The Hague announced Tuesday that he rejected a complaint filed by the PNA against Israel for alleged war crimes during "Operation Cast Lead" in Gaza in 2009. The prosecutor explained that only states can file a complaint with the International Criminal Court. "The Palestinian Authority is only an observer at the United Nations and not a member state. The prosecutor's office noted that, for its purposes, the recognition of "Palestine" by 130 countries and several international organizations, including UN organizations, was immaterial. The decision brings an end to a PNA bid launched on 22 January 2009 to gain defacto recognition by the ICC by granting the Hague jurisdiction over "the territory of Palestine." INN (April 4, 2012).
- Israel's Finance Minister Yuval Steinitz said in an interview with religious daily Makor Rishon that during his term, assistance to settlement in the West Bank and in the Golan rose significantly. Steinitz said that the assistance came because of his deep feeling "that in recent years settlements were discriminated against due to considerations stemming from international pressure and the fact that certain organizations were not investing in settlements in the territories out of fear that such a step would damage their fund-raising ability." Steinitz said that "we had to compensate the settlements for the damage done by the (construction) freeze and the slower pace of building I am very proud of this." He added that he also "had the privilege to contribute much to the Ariel cultural center which was stuck for years because of budgetary problems, and to the Kiryat Arba cultural center." According to Steinitz, the ministry is now assisting the construction of a cultural center in Ma'aleh Adumim. Haaretz (April 5, 2012)
- The Israeli occupation army closed the West Bank border and put its troops on alert for the first two days of the Passover holiday, which began Friday at sundown. Under the ban, no Palestinians are allowed to cross into Israel except those needing medical care. The ban will be lifted on Saturday at midnight. Timesofisrael (April 6, 2012).
- Members of the Israeli Knesset on the right are seeking to remove the Civil Administration, the body responsible for administering Jewish communities in the West Bank, out of the realm of the Defense Ministry's authority. A proposal by Member of Knesset Danny Danon would move the CA into the Home Front Security Ministry, away from the direct control of Defense Minister Ehud Barak, under whose control, Danon said, the CA had become "an enemy of Jewish settlement." Danon is proposing the change after the order this week to expel Jews from the Machpela House (Rajab's family house) in Hebron. Although Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu backed the expulsion, Danon and other MKs and activists on the right said that the action was clearly the doing of Barak, who, Danon said, was using Hebron residents as pawns in his bid to get elected to the Knesset. "Since he realized that he will not be given a guaranteed spot on the Likud list, Barak is trying to gather votes from supporters of the extreme Left," Danon said. Danon filed a request with the Prime Minister and other government ministers formally asking that the Civil Administration be removed from Barak's purview. INN (April 6, 2012)

- The Israeli ministry of Defense and the Israeli Municipality of Jerusalem agreed to commence the building of an Israeli army base that will house military colleges in East Jerusalem. The college will be located on Mount Scopus, between the Mormon University and the Augusta Victoria Hospital, both well into Palestinian territories. The base will encompass 8 acres of land and will include a command and staff school, a school for national security, military academy learning institutes, a swimming pool, a gym and more. Al Quds (April 8, 2012).
- The Israeli local committee for planning and building at the Israeli Municipality of Jerusalem will discuss following the Passover Jewish Holiday the renewal of the building license at Al Mughrabi gate as the current license has expired. The Israeli municipality of Jerusalem plans to demolish Al Mughrabi Gate passage to al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem's Old City and builds a bigger bridge that allows military vehicles and trucks into the al-Aqsa Mosque area, which will expand the area where Jewish worshipers pray at the Western Wall (al-Buraq Wall). Al Quds (April 8, 2012).
- Israelis in the southern city of Asqalan turned 3 dunums of the local Muslim cemetery into a makeshift parking lot. The municipality recently set up a market adjacent to the cemetery, which resulted in shopkeepers and customers parking their cars in the cemetery in complete disregard to the Muslim sacred place. Municipality park employees planted trees around the cemetery perimeter to prevent market attendants from parking in the cemetery, but no avail. Al Ayyam (April 10, 2012).

- Israel's government is scrambling to find ways to save some of the unauthorized West Bank settlements it once promised to dismantle, including some that are built partly on private Palestinian land. The new strategy seeks to retroactively legalize some outposts and, in other cases, relocate Jewish settlers to nearby land that is not privately owned, in effect creating what would be the first new West Bank settlements in years. The approach by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's right-wing coalition government appears designed to avoid the need to carry out high-profile military evictions of settlers in order to appease conservative lawmakers, who have accused Netanyahu of betraying the settlers' cause. Al Quds (April 12, 2012)
- Israeli police spokesman Micky Rosenfeld said that 41 people had been refused entry at Ben Gurion airport and they would be deported. Four Israeli supporters, two holding "Welcome to Palestine" signs, were also arrested as they waited to greet the arrivals. More than 60 percent of the expected 1,500 had their flights canceled by airlines, after Israel circulated a blacklist of passengers and warned it would fine carriers. An Israeli Interior Ministry spokeswoman said the Israeli Immigration Authority had given airlines the names of some 1,200 activists whose entrance to Israel has been barred. Maannews (April 15, 2012).
- Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu informed Likud ministers that he had approved plans to legalize three West Bank settlement outposts. Following the recommendations of Defense Minister Ehud Barak, Netanyahu told a meeting of Likud ministers that he will ask the cabinet to approve the status of the Bruchin, Sansana and Rachalim, respectively. Several of the ministers also asked Netanyahu for updates regarding the Ulpana neighborhood of Beit El, which was slated for evacuation by May. Haaretz (April 17, 2012)
- The Israeli Municipality of Jerusalem renews its demand to demolish the Mughrabi Gate Bridge in Jerusalem's Old City. Both the Municipality of Jerusalem and the Wailing Wall legacy fund advanced to the Israeli sub-committee for planning and building at the municipality to obtain a preliminary approval for the demolition of the bridge and build a new bridge. The Office of Netanyahu was also informed of the demand in order to obtain his consent to demolish the bridge. Wafa (April 17, 2012).

- Israel Police is establishing a new unit to enforce demolition and evacuation orders served to scattered Bedouin villages in southern Israel, in order to deal with "trespassing into state lands." The unit, which will be made up of 200 police officers, will be established in cooperation with the Prime Minister's Office to enforce Israeli land laws in the Negev. The unit's establishment follows a government decision reached last August (2011), in which Minister of Internal Security Yitzhak Aharonovich was granted permission to begin deploying the officers beginning August 1, 2012. Israel Police's Southern District has yet to announce an official plan of operation, which will be charged with evacuations and demolitions. The unit will operate alongside the Interior Ministry, the Israel Land Administration, the Ministry of the Environment, and the Prime Minister's Office among others. Haaretz (April 17, 2012)
- Israeli Coalition Chairman MK Ze'ev Elkin reminded the Israeli Knesset of past outpost political support. "The Ulpana neighborhood was promoted during the previous Netanyahu administration. Ehud Barak, as PM, provided residents with financial encouragement to purchase homes there, and Opposition Chairman Shaul Mofaz, as IDF CoS signed all the approvals. This government was elected for its policies, and we must support the residents who settled the land based on those policies." . INN (April 19, 2012).
- Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu asked the State Prosecutor's Office to examine whether a request can be lodged with the High Court to further delay the evacuation order of the Ulpana neighborhood in the settlement of Beit El, scheduled for May 1. The Ulpana neighborhood is comprised of multi-story buildings housing dozens of families. Haaretz (April 19, 2012).
- "Jewish settlers in Hebron have a right to live wherever they want," Israeli Knesset Member Miri Regev said during a visit to "Machpelah house" in the West Bank city on Thursday. The MK, who was accompanied by leaders of the Jewish community in Hebron and Kiryat Arba Council head Malachi Levinger, urged Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to implement the Hebron agreement. Settlers who set up a protest tent near the "Machpelah house" presented the lawmaker with documents they claim prove it was purchased legally. They asked Regev to act toward expediting the examination of the documents by the relevant authorities Ynetnews (April 19, 2012)

- The Israeli Jerusalem District Court ordered the eviction of six settler families from a Palestinian house they invaded in Hebron by May 15, after ruling that the purchase documents presented by the settlers were in fact forged. The house in question belongs to Zechariah Bakri, a Palestinian man, and is adjacent to a Jewish settlement in the Hebron neighborhood Tel Rumeida. It was deserted in 2001, when the Israeli defense Forces (IDF) restricted the movement of Palestinians in the area. The settlers took possession of the house in 2005, claiming that the construction company Tal Lebniya, owned by Moshe Zar, had lawfully purchased the property. Haaretz (April 22, 2012).
- Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu asked his cabinet to lower the media profile of a debate on the future of the West Bank outpost of Ulpana, just as a chief minister pledged to find a solution that would leave its residents in place. Aides to Defense Minister Ehud Barak released a statement accusing two Israeli cabinet members, Israel's Transportation Minister Yisrael Katz and Vice Prime Minister Moshe Ya'alon of adopting the rhetoric of the extreme right in their objection to a possible move to evacuate Ulpana. Speaking during the weekly meeting of Likud ministers in Jerusalem, Netanyahu, ostensibly referring to the heated media debate, instructed cabinet ministers to lower their media profile, saying that a solution to the issue will be reached. However, immediately following the meeting, chief minister and Vice Prime Minister Silvan Shalom released a statement on his Facebook page, saying that "the settlement flag is the central flag of the Likud movement, and the evacuation of settlements is simply out of the question." "Solutions should be found like compensating land owners, if that is required, or legislation. We will continue to act in a manner which leaves the neighborhood in place and the settlers in their homes," the statement added. Haaretz (April 22, 2012)
- Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu told his cabinet that he would submit the issue of sanctioning three West Bank outposts to a specially formed panel, despite the fact that he was expected to bring their recognition to the approval of the cabinet (Bruchin, Sansana and Rechalim.) Netanyahu added that he intended to regulate the status of Bruchin, Sansana and Rechalim through a panel that would work to recognize settlements built on state land or through aid of any kind from the state. The panel will be comprised of Netanyahu himself, Barak, Vice Prime Minister Moshe Ya'alon, and Minister Benny Begin, and will be authorized to reach a decision on the matter. Haaretz (April 22, 2012).

- Evacuating the Ulpana neighborhood in the West Bank settlement of Beit El could lead to the dissolution of the coalition, Vice Prime Minister Moshe Ya'alon said at a meeting in Be'er Sheva. "We have said that we must not remove the neighborhood," said Ya'alon, who is also Israel's strategic affairs minister. "This is a neighborhood of 15 buildings with six apartments in each building, of completely normative people, and all of a sudden they are being told off because a Palestinian claimed the land belongs to him." "We have said we would not remove this neighborhood. If that happens, the government will fall apart," continued Ya'alon. Haaretz (April 22, 2012)
- Residents of Givat Ha'Ulpana slammed Defense Minister Barak for suggesting they move into 'alternative housing'. Speaking at cabinet's meeting, Israel's Defense Minister Ehud Barak said that there was enough land in Beit El to allow residents of Givat Ha'ulpana to move into homes that had no legal questions surrounding them, as opposed to attempting to remain in homes that the High Court has declared do not belong to them. Barak said that the High Court's ruling was not a technical matter, but an important principle of the rule of law, which the state must uphold if it is to call itself a modern democracy. With that, Barak said that "the question of ownership of the land is still being adjudicated. If it turns out that the land is indeed private, there will be no choice but to evict the residents or to buy the land." Several ministers and MKs, including Science Minister Daniel Hershkowitz, have said that any attempt by the government to remove residents of the neighborhood forcefully would mean the end of the Netanyahu government. "We found 22 dunams of land in the town which could, under certain circumstances and after plans are approved, be used to build alternative homes for residents of the neighborhood," Barak said. "If it turns out that the land is owned by Palestinians, we would have no choice other than to abandon it or purchase it," he added. The Defense Ministry and Civil Administration are working on the issue, along with the Attorney General and Justice Ministry." Givat Ha'Ulpana residents slammed Barak for suggesting that they move to "alternate homes" in Beit El. "Residents of the neighborhood recognized Ehud Barak for the good that he did as Prime Minister, when he provided benefits for residents of Beit El, paved roads in the town, and connected residents to infrastructure." With that, they said, "We are not chess pieces for Ehud Barak to play with, where he builds a house in one location and demolishes one in another. Nowhere in Israel, or in the world, do they tear down thriving neighborhoods, even if it turns out an error was made," had the residents said. Barak should do likewise and acknowledge the residents' rights to remain in their homes. INN (April 22, 2012).

- An Israeli military courted rejected an appeal filed by lawyer Jamil Al-Khateeb, on behalf of Bilal Thiab and Thaer Halahla, who are holding an open-ended hunger strike demanding to be released as no clear charges were filed against them. Al-Khateeb stated that the court claimed that the strike held by the two detainees "does not change the fact that their secret file includes dangerous information", and claimed that "the file proves their involvement in activities that endangers Israel's security". The court also claimed that, should the two be release, "they will pose danger on Israel's security", and added that "the current health condition of the two detainees is due to their hunger strike, and could change if they end their strike". Al-Khateeb stated that the court claims that the two are members of the Islamic Jihad, and that they are involved in violations that include obtaining automatic weapons, and planned attacks against Israeli targets. No specific and clear charges were filed against them yet due to the claimed "secret file" that even the defense attorney can have access to. IMEMC (April 23, 2012).
- The Israeli TV, Channel 10, reported that Israel will start the construction of a separation Wall along part of the border with Lebanon, north of the country. The construction will commence next week, and the Wall will be built around the border town of Al-Mutallah. The Wall will be more than 2 kilometers (1.24 Miles) long and 10 meters (32.8 Feet) high. Israel claims that the wall also aims at preventing armed clashes between Israeli soldiers and Lebanese soldiers as their posts and towers are often a few meters away from each other. Channel 10 reported that Israel had officially informed the Lebanese government of its intentions, and that the construction will be conducted through the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). IMEMC (April 24, 2012).
- Israeli bulldozers demolished the Bedouin village Al-Araqib village for the 37th time. The Palestinian residents began to immediately rebuild the site, after forces left just a mosque and cemetery standing. Israel considers Al-Araqeeb, along with 34 other Bedouin villages in the Negev, an illegal settlement built on state-owned land. Maannews (April 24, 2012).

- Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and a panel of ministers decided to instruct the State Prosecution to ask the High Court of Justice for another extension for the eviction of the Ulpana neighborhood in Beit El, after a previous attempt to delay the evacuation of five buildings in a West Bank settlement failed. The State Prosecution will attempt to set a new schedule for the evacuation of the Beit El buildings, currently slated for May 1, after the court found that they were illegally built on private Palestinian land. "The Prosecution has already started working on the new request and will submit it to the High Court of Justice early next week," a senior official said. If the court grants the state an extension, "a panel of experts will be set up to once again look into the legal status of the buildings." During the meeting, which lasted over four hours, Netanyahu said that the evacuation of the buildings must be averted. Vice Prime Minister Moshe Ya'alon called for preventing the evacuation "that is neither fair nor reasonable." Defense Minister Ehud Barak said that the 30 families that reside in the buildings can be offered alternative apartments in the settlement proper. Haaretz (April 24, 2012)
- Israeli Government officials have instructed OC Central Command Maj. Gen. Nitzan Alon to sign an order to allow the placement of temporary structures near Migron in the West Bank, without going through the legally mandated planning procedures. The structures are to serve as temporary housing for the residents of Migron, an outpost built on private Palestinian land which is slated to be evacuated in the summer. In a letter written recently to Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein, Central Command legal adviser Col. Eli Baron wrote that this was a dangerous suggestion that creates "a slippery slope of exemptions and variances" and undermined the foundations of planning and building law. The order would allow the placement of temporary structures there for four years, at points that have regional importance and reasons to justify them. Those erecting the buildings would have to dismantle them within four years or face legal action. Haaretz (April 24, 2012).
- Israel closed checkpoints in the West Bank late Tuesday for 48 hours while the country commemorates national holidays. All entry and exit crossings from the West Bank will be closed until Thursday at midnight, with the exception of prior-authorized medical emergencies. Maannews (April 25, 2012).

- Israel's Supreme Court rejected an appeal by A Palestinian prisoner who has been on hunger strike for more than seven weeks. Hassan Safdi, 31, was arrested on June 29, 2011 and has been held in administrative detention since then. He has been on hunger strike since March 5. Safdi's lawyer, Osama Maqbul reported that he lodged an appeal against the administrative detention order with an Israeli military court last month but it had been rejected. A second appeal, this time to the Israeli Supreme Court, was also rejected, Maqbul reported, with the court asking Safdi to end his hunger strike. Al Quds (April 26, 2012).
- UN chief Ban Ki-moon said that he was "deeply troubled" by Israel's decision to grant legal status to three settlement outposts in the West Bank, describing the activity as illegal under international law. Referring to three outposts Bruchin, Sansana and Rechalim, Ban's office said in a statement that the "Secretary-General is deeply troubled by the decision of the Government of Israel to formally approve three outposts in the West Bank." "The Secretary-General reiterates that all settlement activity is illegal under international law. It runs contrary to Israel's obligations under the Road Map and repeated Quartet calls for the parties to refrain from provocations," it said. The United States also said it was "concerned by the reports" of Israel's decision. "We don't think this is helpful to the [peace] process, and we don't accept the legitimacy of continued settlement activity," said State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland. Haaretz (April 26, 2012)
- A group of Israeli settlers broke into an Israeli military base in the West Bank and wrote graffiti against the army before the soldiers managed to apprehend nine of them who arrived at the base in order to protest against the army. The arrested settlers were moved to an interrogation facility. IMEMC (April 27, 2012).
- The Israeli State filed a High Court appeal asking that the court revisit the petition filed over the pending eviction of the Ulpana neighborhood, located in the West Bank settlement of Beit El. The State wishes to renege on its commitment to evacuate the area by May 1. The petition also asked the court for a three-month extension, which will allow the State to re-file its official position on the matter; and is seeking a stay of the demolition orders issued on the neighborhood's homes for the duration of that time. The petition said that "Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and the Cabinet wish to reconsider the way the policy – that states that every structure erected on private Palestinian land will be razed – is implemented." According to the petition, "After much deliberation and the examination of various alternatives, and after giving due consideration to the broad social implications the implementation of these policies may have on future construction, the (government) has decided to review the legal priorities in the area." The government wishes "To take into account all the possible zoning, social, political and operational ramifications," the appeal said. Ynetnews (April 27, 2012).

- The Israeli government asked the Supreme Court to delay the eviction of a Jewish neighborhood in the West Bank. Israel had promised the court it would evict the Ulpana neighborhood in Beit El settlement, built on land belonging to Palestinians, by May 1. But the Israeli government appealed to the court to backtrack on the pledge and requested a 3-month delay to the eviction in a petition to the Supreme Court.. "Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and the Cabinet wish to reconsider the way the policy -- that states that every structure erected on private Palestinian land will be razed -- is implemented". Ynetnews (April 27, 2012).
- The Palestinian Center for Human Rights issued its weekly report on the Israeli violations in the occupied Palestinian territories, revealing that Israeli soldiers conducted 81 invasions into the West Bank, and one into the Gaza Strip. Several injuries and arrests were reported in the Israeli attacks. Soldiers carried out 81 invasions into Palestinian communities in the occupied West Bank, and kidnapped 15 Palestinian civilians, including four children and one woman. IMEMC (April 27, 2012).
- The Israeli cabinet unanimously approved a proposal to erect temporary housing for residents of the illegal West Bank outpost of Migron, which would allow for the outpost's evacuation by July 15. The High Court of Justice last month ordered the state to evacuate the illegal West Bank outpost and dismantle it by August 1, after rejecting an agreement between the settlers and state to defer the evacuation by three years. Haaretz (April 29, 2012)
- Israel is set to spend NIS 25 million to build a temporary housing site for Migron's settlers, who have been ordered to leave the West Bank outpost by August. Migron residents are due to move into temporary housing in the settlement of Kokhav Ya'akov. The temporary site will consist of public structures, 50 prefabricated homes and minimal infrastructure, at estimated cost of NIS 500,000 per family, totaling NIS 25 million. The state of Israel will probably foot the bill, it was learned. Haaretz (April 29, 2012).

- Israel's Supreme Court postponed the demolition of Ulpana outpost in the West Bank, a ruling that gave the government more time to argue against their destruction and placate pro-settler political partners. The court said it would freeze the demolition, originally scheduled for May 1, for 60 days and meet again at the end of that period to hear the government's argument. "No later than 60 days from today the State Attorney's office will present an updated declaration and according to what it says, we will decide how to proceed with this petition," part of the court's ruling. Maannews (April 29, 2012).
- Meir Margalit, a Jerusalem municipal council member, was questioned on Sunday under warning, about his part in rebuilding a house demolished by the municipality in the East Jerusalem neighborhood of A-Tur. This is the first time an Israeli activist has been questioned about helping to rebuild demolished houses. An Interior Ministry spokesperson reported that "following a request by the state prosecutor's Land Laws Enforcement Unit, Mr. Meir Margalit was summoned for questioning on suspicion of building without a permit, which is a criminal act. Haaretz (April 30, 2012).
- The government will fund two temporary housing solutions for the residents of the illegal outpost of Migron, each of which will cost at least NIS 25 million. The unanimous cabinet decision came in the wake of last month's rejection by the High Court of Justice of the state's request that the evacuation of Migron be delayed, and the court's reaffirmation of its order that Migron must be evacuated by August 1, 2012. One of the temporary sites, known as the Yekev compound, is about two kilometers from Migron, next door to the permanent site selected for the Migron settlers. The Yekev site had originally been zoned as a tourist site, but GOC Central Command Nitzan Alon is expected to sign an order expediting the rezoning of the site for housing. According to the cabinet decision, the cost of the NIS 25 million move will be shared by the Finance Ministry, which will immediately give NIS 4.62 million for the planning of infrastructure in the temporary site and for the placement of temporary dwellings there.

If planning is completed by June 17, another NIS 7 million will be paid out for development; NIS 13 million will then be used to purchase prefabricated houses, which will be government property and will be rented to the Migron settlers at market prices. However, due to several complications involving the Yekev site, the state has prepared a backup plan to settle the Migron evacuees at the settlement of Adam - where they were to have moved four years ago. As part of that plan, the cabinet decided to immediately transfer NIS 28.5 million to the Housing and Construction Ministry to develop infrastructure for residential housing. Even if Adam does not become the temporary site for the Migron evacuees, the NIS 28 million will have gone for infrastructure for housing there. Effectively, this means that two new neighborhoods could go up instead of Migron: one in Adam and the other in the Yekev compound. The target date for completion of the temporary site is July 15, 2012. Haaretz (April 30, 2012)
