- The Jerusalem municipality plans to evict some 120 Bedouins from the eastern part of Jerusalem city to make room for a landfill. The 500-dunam dump, which will be located in a wadi below a road leading east from the city to the Israeli settlement of Ma'aleh Adumim, will handle construction waste from the entire Jerusalem area. The landfill is expected to completely fill the wadi in about 20 years, after which the plan calls for building a public park atop it. But leftist and human rights organizations such as Ir Amim, several of which sent activists to the site this week, say the plan's real purpose is to prevent the construction of housing for East Jerusalem's Palestinian residents."Parks have become another way to take over land in East Jerusalem," said Ir Amim's Ahmad Sub Laban. "The parks, along with the new landfill, are meant to create a continuous stretch of land between Jerusalem and Ma'aleh Adumim in the E1 region, which will divide the West Bank in two and prevent a future political agreement." The residents of the wadi, most of whom are members of the Jahalin tribe, live in an enclave between the separation fence and a security fence lining the road to Ma'aleh Adumim, and must pass through a special gate to reach their village. But despite the difficulties that entails, they view being evicted as far worse. The plan to destroy what is essentially the only Bedouin village within Jerusalem's municipal boundaries won preliminary approval from the regional planning and building committee last week. Opponents currently have a chance to submit objections. The residents of the wadi, most of them Israeli citizens or residents have lived there for the past 40 years, in a collection of tents, shacks and small stone houses between the neighborhoods of Isawiyah and Shoafat. The city said the houses in question are "illegal constructions over which legal proceedings have been held, with representatives of the Bedouin families participating," adding that the planned park would serve residents of nearby Arab neighborhoods like Isawiyah. A year ago, the Jerusalem Planning and Building Committee approved the plan to establish a new national park in the area of Mount Scopus. However, the plan was frozen by a court order due to a petition regarding the question of whether it is necessary to translate "They See Not, Nor Know" into Arabic. Palestinian residents and left-leaning organizations in the city say the aim of the national park, like that of other parks and public gardens in East Jerusalem, is to prevent the development of the two adjacent Palestinian neighborhoods, Issawiya and a-Tur. The national park is slated to be constructed on areas designated in the past for expansion and will, in fact, create a situation in which the neighborhoods will not have anywhere to develop. - Head of the Israeli Knesset, Rabin Revlin, called on secretly implementing the findings of Edmond Levi report on West Bank settlements. The report found that Israeli settlements in the West Bank are legal under international law and recommended that the government avoid demolishing illegal outposts. NBPRS (November 1, 2012)

- The Israeli Ministry of housing and construction and the Israeli Land Administration started marketing for land pieces to build more than five thousand new housing units, two thousand of which are to be built in Jerusalem and the surrounding areas. The units were distributed as follow: 936 housing units in Jerusalem, 157 housing units in Tzur Hadassah settlement, 607 housing units in Pisgat Ze'ev, 66 housing units in Meveseret Zion settlement, 92 housing units in Ma'ale Adoumim settlement, 15 housing units in Ramat Beit Shemish, 84 housing units in Kiryat Arba', 114 housing units in Efrat – Giv'at Hatamar site and 10 units in Giv'at Hadagan site, and 38 housing units in Adam (Phase A). Al-Quds (November 3, 2012)

- Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat is promoting a plan to transfer the Israel Defense Forces General Staff headquarters from the Kirya complex in Tel Aviv to a location just outside the Jerusalem neighborhood of Ramot. According to the proposed plan, an upscale neighborhood encompassing 734 housing units and a country club will be constructed near the base to accommodate soldiers and officers stationed there. Barkat is said to have discussed the matter with Chief of General Staff Lt. Gen. Benny Gantz and Defense Ministry officials on several occasions. One Defense Ministry official who commented on the plan said, "This is a preliminary plan that is being considered by relevant professionals in the Defense Ministry and IDF as part of a strategic plan for 2030. If and when the plan is approved, it will be implemented more than a decade from now." Meirav Cohen, a member of the Jerusalem municipality council and the Awakening In Jerusalem movement, said "There are some 60 government offices in Tel Aviv that must be transferred to Jerusalem in accordance with the law. Transferring the offices will generate thousands of new jobs for residents of the city. Everyone will benefit from this move. The government will save public funds due to the freeing up of expensive real estate in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem will benefit as well." Israel Hayom (November 10, 2012)
- Israel's State prosecutors petitioned the High Court of Justice on to extend a deadline for the dismantling of five structures in the Ulpana neighborhood in Beit El. Prosecutors said evacuation of the buildings, scheduled to end in two months, has slowed due to technical difficulties in removing the structures slated for transfer to another location. In the petition, the attorneys claim that the process involves "exceptionally difficult work with many safety risks." Due to the modern methods used to build the structures, they wrote, "the Defense Ministry does not currently have the knowledge or experience to handle the job." The neighborhood was supposed to be moved by Jan. 15, 2013. The evacuation of the Ulpana neighborhood in Beit El began in June after the High Court verdict was given. Authorities moved the residents of five disputed apartment blocks to a temporary location

- until their homes could be permanently relocated. A total of 31 families were resettled in prefabricated homes at a nearby military base in Beit El and the evacuation marked the first nonviolent removal of a settlement in Israel for many years. Israel Hayom (November 10, 2012)
- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) hindered the High commissioner of Human Rights “Kuonig Kang” from entering the Occupied Palestinian Territory; Mr. Kang was on his way to attend a meeting organized by the Ministry of Prisoners in Ramallah city. Al-Quds (November 12, 2012).
  - The Israeli Defense Minister Ehud Barak has agreed to advance a plan to expand the Itamar settlement to five times its size by adding 538 homes. A meeting took place on September 24 in Barak's office to discuss the new plan for Itamar, which is five kilometers southeast of Nablus. At issue was a plan to retroactively approve 137 homes that are already built, and to build an additional 538 homes. Only recently, Barak told the Israel Hayom newspaper that Israel would have to converge into settlement blocs as part of a final agreement with the Palestinians. "There will be isolated communities that will have no alternative but to be brought home [into Israel] or to be allowed to try living under the Palestinian Authority," he said. Barak's office said Sunday, "Advancing the planning procedures for Itamar's urban plan was approved for the purpose of regularizing the current situation on April 30, 2012. As for construction beyond what currently exists, issuing building permits requires additional approval by the Defense Ministry. At this stage there is no approval for any additional construction." Haaretz (November 12, 2012)
  - The High Court of Justice gave the Israel state four months to present a written argument in support of building on private Palestinian property in the Beit El settlement that was initially seized by the IDF for military purposes before 1979. The court cautioned the plaintiff and the defendant against viewing the decision as a sign of support for one side or the other. At issue are five apartment buildings, two of which are already under construction and three others which a developers hope to build. The state's argument as already partially stated, both in a September brief to the court and in a hearing on Sunday, runs counter to 33 years of legal interpretations with respect to a 1979 High Court Decision that dealt with the Elon Moreh settlement. In that ruling, the court prohibited Jewish construction on private Palestinian property seized for military purposes. The court's interim decision was that the state would have four months, until March 11, 2013, to elaborate on its position. IPOST (November 12, 2012)

- The Israeli Defense force (IDF) continues firing on targets in Gaza as infantry and armored units gather near the border. On third day of operation, IDF hits dozens of Gaza targets from air and sea. "The prime minister's instructions are to hit them hard," says official Shlomo Cesana and Lilach Shoval. Operation Pillar of Defense entered its third day on Friday, the 16th of November, and the Israel Defense Forces were preparing for a ground assault in Gaza by calling up thousands of reservists. The reservists will be joining the soldiers already moving toward Gaza, after IDF Chief of General Staff Lt. Gen. Benny Gantz instructed forces to accelerate preparations for a ground operation. So far, 16,000 reservists have been sent voice messages telling them to report for duty. Israeli Hayom (November 16, 2012).
- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) forced a Swedish solidarity delegation to leave the occupied Palestinian territory after detaining them at Shavei Shomron checkpoint and checking their passports. The IOF also took the delegation to a military camp nearby and assaulted them before taking them to Allenby Bridge to leave the territories. It is worth mentioning that the delegation faced the Israeli assault and humiliation under the pretext of dealing with Palestinian organizations. Al-Quds (November 25, 2012)
- Since the beginning of Operation Pillar of Defense in Gaza, protest demonstrations have been held throughout the West Bank. In some of these cases the Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) and border police fired live bullets at the participants. An investigation into these incidents by B'Tselem raises the suspicion that command echelons have permitted soldiers to use live fire, including confrontations with stone throwers who are not armed and in situations that are not life threatening to the soldiers. The serious injuries caused by direct hits from tear gas canisters and rubber-coated bullets are a direct result of existing practices among security forces, including the unlawful firing of these weapons, which B'Tselem has documented extensively in recent years: Soldiers and border policemen shoot aluminum tear gas canisters directly at people, although military regulations forbid it. In addition, security forces fire rubber bullets at shorter ranges than permitted in the regulations and in a manner that makes it impossible to avoid injuring sensitive parts of the body. B'Tselem has written urgently to the IDF OC Central Command, the Commander of military forces in Judea and Samaria, and the legal advisor for Judea and Samaria, demanding that it will be made unequivocally clear to soldiers and commanders in the West Bank that there is an absolute prohibition on shooting live ammunition at stone throwers. B'Tselem also demanded that crowd control weapons like tear gas and rubber-coated bullets be

- utilized in accordance with open-fire regulations and in a manner that does not endanger human life. B'Tselem (November 25, 2012)
- The Israeli news website “Walla” declared that the Israeli Ministry of Transportation will allocate separate buses for Palestinian citizens who live in Israel to transfer them from Tel-Aviv to the West bank and hinder them from using the same buses which used by the Israeli settlers. This plan comes after Israeli settlers complained about Palestinian citizens who use the same buses that settlers use. Wafa (November 26, 2012)
  - During the Oslo era, successive Israeli governments have invested almost $7 billion to encourage and expand settlement in the West Bank and, until 2005, in the Gaza Strip. After the signing of the Oslo accords in 1993, the government of Yitzhak Rabin inaugurated huge infrastructure projects favoring settlement in the West Bank, most notably the new system of bypass roads linking settlements to Israel. In 1993, governmental investment in the territories peaked at more than $627 million, $605 million of which was earmarked for construction, housing, and development. From 1994 to 1997, investment averaged $376 million annually, while in 2003, it reached about $527 million. According to data compiled by Israel’s Central Bureau of Statistics, from 1992 to 2011 the Israeli government invested more than $6.77 billion (in 2011 dollars) in the territories. The completion of large-scale infrastructure projects, a national slowdown in construction, and the effects of the intifada that erupted in 2002 combined to reduce government investment, in some years dramatically. From 2003 onward, governmental investment in the territories declined in real terms. In 2009, for example, $202 million (805 million shekels) was invested by government agencies, even as the settler population continued to grow at around 5 percent annually. Beginning in 2009, following the establishment of the second Netanyahu government, governmental investment in the territories increased. In 2010, the government allocated about $212 million for the territories, and in 2011, a time of increasing budget austerity, governmental investment skyrocketed by almost 38 percent, to nearly $276 million. Even with this large increase, the 2011 figure was still below the years of peak expenditure in the 1990s. From 2003 through 2011, Israeli governments invested more than $2.5 billion in the settlements. All expenditures, excluding defense and security costs, are included in this figure and cover services to which all citizens are entitled, including transfers from the central government in support of the settlements’ local authorities, investment in infrastructure and public facilities, and tax benefits, grants, and subsidies, including mortgage subsidies that represent losses in state revenue. Together these allocations can be said to illustrate the state's extraordinary investment in the settlement enterprise. For more info, click FMEP (November 27, 2012)

- Israel and the United States are still engaged in efforts to thwart Mahmoud Abbas' plan to seek a status upgrade at the General Assembly on the 29th of November 2012 but chances of halting the bid appear very unlikely. The Palestinian bid is set to receive the support of over 150 states. A senior US administration official said that Abbas' decision to take his bid for non-member state to the UN is unwise and will not bring the Palestinians any closer to realizing their legitimate aspirations for statehood. He said that the bid creates "a negative atmosphere" and complicates efforts to restart peace talks and promote a two-state solution. According to the official, Washington is currently focused on one task – persuading the Palestinians to withdraw their bid and getting as many nations to vote against it. He hinted that the status upgrade would have an effect on the US's financial aid to the Palestinian Authority. A senior state official said that Israel will respond with penal measures such as freezing funds, adopting parts of the Edmond Levy Report and revoking VIP cards for senior PA officials. Meanwhile, the Foreign Ministry has instructed all Israel missions to refuse to accept official letters containing the words "State of Palestine." Ynetnews (November 27, 2012).
