The IOA fired teargas and stun grenades at Palestinians and land, causing dozens of suffocation cases and the torch of 45 dunums of land planted with 300 olive trees. (Maannews 6 June 2014)

- Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) set up fence at the entrance of Al-Walajeh village, west of Bethlehem city, and at Palestinian land near Har Gilo settlement. Note that the new fence set up on the route of the segregation wall. (Mawwal 12 June 2014)

- The tree uprooting heard around the world. The Nassar family had its fruit trees in the West Bank uprooted by the army last month despite a pending legal appeal, which the army now says wasn't done properly. Daher Nassar keeps farmer's hours, rising early to tend his fruit trees. But on one recent morning, one of the villagers overlooking his orchard called him extra early and woke him. His trees, which he says numbered about 1,500, had been bulldozed and removed by the Israel Defense Forces before the sun raised over the West Bank hilltops. Now, he looks out wistfully at the hard earth of the valley known as Wadi Salem, a few leftover branches jutting out here or there. "I raised those trees like I raised my own children," he says, standing in the valley just below the Palestinian villages of Nahhalin and lying low beneath the high-ground settlement of Neve Daniel. "I had figs, apples, apricots, olives, grape vines. Why would they destroy them?" The uprooting happened on May 19. A few weeks prior, the IDF's Civil Administration left a notice under a large rock near the trees, saying that it was state land that must be evacuated. In response, on May 12, the Nassar family filed an appeal through their lawyer, stating that they could prove that the trees were planted on family land. Although no verdict was given and only a week had passed, the trees were uprooted and removed anyway, the land bulldozed. ([Haaretz] 12 June 2014)

- Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) attacked the weekly non-violent protest against the Segregation wall and settlements in Al-Masara village, south of Bethlehem city. The IOA closed the main entrance of the village and prevented the participants from reaching to confiscate land. (Wafa 13 June 2014)

- Israeli police raid East Jerusalem TV station mid-broadcast. Police hold three people for questioning, interrupt morning show over claims studio has no permit. Israeli police raided a Palestinian television station in East Jerusalem on Friday morning, and detained a cameraman, an editor and a guest for questioning. The raid occurred during a live broadcast of the show "Good Morning Jerusalem," aired on Palestinian television, which on Friday dealt with the Palestinian detainees' hunger strike. The broadcast was stopped once the police entered the studio. The three held were released after questioning by Jerusalem police. The police said the station has no broadcasting permit, but sources in the studio said they have all the necessary permits, and that this is the first time such claims have been leveled against them. The studio clarified they never received any cease and desist on the matter, or any warnings to get a permit. Jerusalem police said that "the officers arrived at the scene and detained for questioning three people to examine the legality of the broadcasts. The three presented the permits and were released after a short while." However, AFP reported that police spokeswoman Luba Samri said the raid was part of an investigation into the content of the programs, suspecting "incitements to violence." (Haaretz 6 June 2014)

- Defense Ministry: Army to keep expelling Palestinians from firing zones. Deputy Defense Minister Danny Danon responded to query about a Haaretz report that the military uses training zones to displace Palestinians. The army plans to continue expelling Palestinians from military firing zones in Area C of the West Bank, which is under total Israeli control, Deputy Defense Minister Danny Danon told the Knesset on Wednesday. "It's not pleasant to remove people from their homes, but what can we do when these are designated firing zones?" he said. "Whoever is in an area that doesn't belong to him that has been declared a firing zone will have to be evacuated from there, and yes, we plan to remove more people." Danon was responding to an urgent parliamentary query by MK Tamar Zandberg (Meretz) following a Haaretz report that an Israel Defense Forces official acknowledged the IDF uses training zones in the West Bank to displace Palestinians. Zandberg addressed her query to the Defense Ministry, asking how the officials' admission was congruent with the state's argument that live-fire zones are designated solely for military purposes. She demanded to know what the defense minister was doing to prevent the IDF from being used for political purposes. After hearing Danon's response, Zandberg posted a scathing attack on Danon on her Facebook page. "The deputy defense minister replied that the IDF will continue these expulsions, 'enforcement' as he put it in his whitewashed language, while ignoring the fact that on some of these firing zones from which Palestinians are expelled, Jewish settlement construction is continuing, an inelegant evasion of the report to the Knesset by Col. Einav Shalev that the IDF is increasing training to push Palestinians out of Area C," she wrote. "Apparently the deputy minister is starting to prepare to implement the Bennett plan to annex Area C while cleansing it of as many as possible Palestinians. There is no choice but to replace this government." MK Dov Khenin (Hadash) echoed Zandberg, saying, "Just as we saw in the case of Firing Zone 918 [in the South Hebron Hills], after the Palestinians are expelled on grounds that it's a firing zone, settlers are allowed to take control of the land. We must immediately stop these transfer practices under the auspices of the IDF. (Haaretz 12 June 2014)

- A report published by Euro-Mid Observer for Human Rights organization declared that the Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) occupied a Palestinian house and detained the residents; "In the night of 6 June 2014, at least 11 Israeli soldiers have taken over the home of Mohamed Ayad (73) and Nejma Ayad (68), American citizens, in the village of Silwad, in the West Bank, and turned their home into a military outpost. Video footage, photographs and witness statements indicate that Mohamed and Nejma Ayad posed no imminent threat to the Israeli forces that have entered and taken up positions in their home. The Israeli soldiers have forced the elderly couple to stay in the living room, effectively imprisoning them, while they use the rest of their house as a military observation and sniper position. The Israeli army has a long and frequent pattern of taking over Palestinian civilians' homes and holding their inhabitants as human shields while using the house as a military base. The willful imprisonment and use of civilians as human shields by Israeli security forces as part of the occupation is a war crime. Israel has a responsibility to prosecute the forces who have take the home of the Ayads, and also those responsible for assigning the use of human shields, as this practice increases the risk to the Palestinian families concerned." - Jerusalem's historic neighborhoods get master plan. German and Greek Colonies, Talbiyeh and Katamonim will be subject to comprehensive redevelopment. Many of Jerusalem's historic neighborhoods, including the capital's German Colony, are destined for a comprehensive upgrading aimed at preserving their unique character while making way for new housing that will bring in younger people. A new master plan for the capital approved last week by the Jerusalem Regional Planning and Building Committee encompasses neighborhoods built from the late 1800s through the 1930s, such as Talbieh, Katamonim and the Greek Colony. The area is home to some 17,000 residents and covers 1,400 dunams (350 acres), bounded on the north by Jabotinsky Street, on the west by Palmah Street and Agnon Street, on the south by Yohanan Ben-Zakai Street and the new Railroad Track Park, and on the east by King David Street and Bethlehem Road. The idea is to preserve the "spirit of the neighborhoods," whose history is a major part of the development of the modern city since it expanded outside the walls of the Old City in the middle of the 19th century during the rule of the Ottoman Turks, through the British Mandate in the 1930s. "The plan that the municipality has worked on is proof that conservation is not the opposite of development, and that design values of the past can strengthen the public sphere and make it a center of interest on a national and international scale," said Kobi Kahlon, deputy mayor and chairman of the Regional Planning and Building Committee. Over the past three decades the neighborhoods have had a large number of specific plans approved, but in the absence of a master plan they threatened the area's overall character. As a result the city decided there was a clear need to provide a solution for the neighborhoods and urban setting as a whole as part of the city's planning policy, while emphasizing the unique characteristics of each area. The plan leaves open the possibility of building 1,500 housing units in the area, with the goal of drawing a younger population, as well as to upgrade the public spaces, parks, public buildings and streets, among them the Germany Colony's Emek Refaim Street, a major hub of Jerusalem's nightlife. The idea behind the plan is to create a mechanism for supervising detailed planning. It provides policy directives for each neighborhood that will serve as the basis for the detailed plans on issues such as sustainable development, transportation and parking, open space, urban nature sites and bicycle paths. It will also provide design guidelines for various sites in the area, emphasizing both development and preservation, with a specific focus on Emek Refaim, public structures, commercial areas, entertainment and culture. The plan was also prepared in coordination with residents and local neighborhood committees, which together defined the characteristics of the areas to be preserved – as well as the problems that need fixing. but ignores seven buildings in West Bank outpost which trespass on same area. Israel is seeking to authorize a settlement outpost illegally erected in an army firing zone, while simultaneously waging a legal battle for the eviction of Palestinian villages in the very same area. Avigayl, an illegal outpost in the southern Hebron Hills founded in 2001 on more than 1,000 dunams (250 acres) of land, is located between the Maon and Susya settlements. In 2013, Palestinians who own part of the land on which the outpost was erected appealed to the Supreme Court, asking it to require the state to implement demolition orders standing against the outpost. The state announced in February its intentions to legalize the outpost, and on Thursday it issued a statement revealing that seven of the outpost's buildings lie inside the Firing Zone 918, a 30,000-dunam IDF firing zone established in the 1980s which stretches from the southern Hebron Hills to Arad. In 1999, the state evicted hundreds of Palestinian residents from the very same firing zone, demolished their homes and stoppers their wells. The residents filed an appeal with the Supreme Court to prevent further evictions, but the state notified the court in 2012 that the firing zone is necessary and that it will not allow permanent residence in the area. In a discussion held last summer, the judges asked the state to engage in mediation process with the Palestinian plaintiffs in order to find a compromise. It now appears that although the state is ordering the eviction of Palestinian villages in the firing zone, it turns a blind eye to settler trespassers in the same area. The statement on Thursday also revealed that six of the buildings in Avigayl outpost were erected on private Palestinian property, as was the access road to the outpost, further complicating legalization plans. The statement did indicate that a mobile home used as a barracks and set up on private property will be moved. The IDF has so far given no response. (Haaretz 1 June 2014)

- Prisoner Release bill deferred to cabinet discussions. Attorney general notes 'legal difficulties' in bill; Netanyahu defers to cabinet causing anger from Bayit Yehudi. A law that would prevent negotiators from releasing Palestinian prisoners during peace talks was delayed Sunday by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and deferred to the cabinet for approval just before a Knesset vote was expected to pass the law, drafted and sponsered by Economic Minister Naftali Bennett's Bayit Yehudi party. The law, which was approved for a final Knesset vote three weeks ago, only referred to those prisoners who are serving life sentences in Israeli jails. Netanyahu's decision of deferral to the cabinet will delay the Knesset vote into next week. Netanyahu reportedly made his decision for further discussions in the cabinet after Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein said that the bill contained "legal difficulties" in the language of the text that would need to be cleared up and ironed out. Bennett and his party fumed over the delay saying, "Netanyahu, the prime minister that's released the greatest number of murderers prevented a vote on a law that makes sense." "Netanyhau, a world champion in releasing murderers, broke a new record: he ran from voting on a law that he supports himself," said sources in Bayit Yehudi. Netanyahu replied to the attacks saying that there should be more thorough discussion of the law with the help of the cabinet. The bill was expected pass despite opposition from some political parties like Yesh Atid. (Ynetnews 1 June 2014)

- Ministers: Examine Possibility of Gush Etzion Annexation. At a meeting of the security cabinet, ministers discussed the establishment of a committee to establish criteria for the annexation of Gush Etzion, south of Jerusalem, to Israel. The committee is being set up at the express request of Economics Minister Naftali Bennett. Bennett has proposed annexing all of Area C, where the large majority of Israelis in Judea and Samaria live. The committee, to be made up of ministers, will discuss recent events in the region, including the establishment of the Fatah-Hamas unity government. In light of that development, the committee will discuss unilateral steps, such as annexation, that Israel can take. Justice Minister Tzipi Livni and Finance Minister Yair Lapid have both said that they would pull their parties (Hatnu'a and Yesh Atid) out of the government if any lands in Judea and Samaria are annexed. Speaking last week, Bennett said that he was not concerned over such threats. "Livni likes to attack me," said Bennett in response to a question about her threat. In addition to the annexation, the ministers authorized Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu to impose more sanctions on the PA government. In response, Gush Etzion Regional Council head Davidi Perl said that "the natural response to the establishment of the Fatah-Hamas unity government would be the annexation of all Judea and Samaria, including the Jordan Valley. With that the annexation of Gush Etzion would be an excellent way to kick

- Israeli response to Palestinian unity cabinet: 1,500 new housing units in the settlements. Last week PM Netanyahu told settler leaders 'international constraints' prevent Israel from pursuing construction in West Bank, East Jerusalem. The Housing Ministry announced tenders for 1,500 new housing units in the West Bank and East Jerusalem on Wednesday night, a move termed by Minister Uri Ariel as a response to the new Palestinian unity cabinet. According to the statement, tenders were released for 223 new apartments in Efrat, 484 housing units in Beitar Ilit, 38 units in Geva Binyamin (Adam), 76 in Ariel, 78 in Alfei Menashe, 155 in Givat Ze'ev, 55 of which in Agan Ha'ayalot, and 400 new units in the Ramat Shlomo neighborhood in East Jerusalem. "I congratulate the decision to give a proper Zionist response to the establishment of the Palestinian terror cabinet," Minister Ariel said. "The right and duty of the State of Israel to build across the country to lower the housing prices is unquestionable, and I believe these tenders are just the beginning." (Haaretz 5 June 2014)

- Israel advancing plans for 1,800 new settlement units - on top of tenders for 1,500 units. Palestinians warn their reaction will be 'unprecedented;' U.S. envoy Dan Shapiro criticizes move, says White House opposed to settlement construction. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu decided Thursday to unfreeze planning processes for 1,800 housing units in the settlements that have been frozen the last three months, in response to the establishment of the Palestinian unity government earlier this week. The announcement comes just hours after the Housing Ministry published tenders for 1,500 housing units in the West Bank and East Jerusalem on Wednesday, a move termed by Minister Uri Ariel as a response to the new Palestinian unity cabinet. "When Israel is spat upon, it has to do something about it," Ariel told Israel Radio, adding that construction tenders had been issued as a response to what he termed a Palestinian "terrorist government." The new move, revealed on Thursday, calls for the advancement of planning processes at various stages. Planning processes for settlements at the interim stage, include 550 units in Bruchin, 381 units in Givat Ze'ev, 40 units in El Matan, 38 units in Kochav Ya'akov, 25 units in Alfei Menasheh, 54 units in Tzofit and 10 units in Oranit. In the Alei Zahav settlement, 683 will be promoted at the advanced stage, the last stage before marketing for construction. The units were approved already in 1985, however had to undergo a renewed approval process due to a chance in access roads to the settlements. In addition, numerous housing units at the initial stage of the planning process, when they are publicized and subject to public opposition, will be promoted in the settlements Beit Arieh, Kiryat Netafim, Alon Shvut, Beitar Ilit, Ma'ale Adumim, Alfei Menasheh, Oranit and Ariel. - Australia: East Jerusalem not 'occupied' by Israel. 'The description of East Jerusalem as 'occupied' is a term freighted with pejorative implications which is neither appropriate nor useful,' says Australia's attorney general. Australian Prime Minister Tony Abbott's government has decided to drop the word "occupied" when describing Israel's settlements in East Jerusalem, Australian Associated Press reported Thursday. According to the report, the government said it was "unhelpful" at a time when the peace process was still viable. The move was announced following a fire debate in the Australian legislator regarding the legality of Israel's settlements, the press agency reported. Australia's Attorney General George Brandis elaborated on the call, saying it was "unhelpful" to invoke history when speaking about the flashpoint area, citing what the Australian Associated Press called the ongoing Middle East peace process. "The description of East Jerusalem as 'occupied' East Jerusalem is a term freighted with pejorative implications which is neither appropriate nor useful," Brandis reportedly said. "It should not and will not be the practice of the Australian government to describe areas of negotiation in such judgmental language," the Australian Associated Press reported. Attorney General Brandis was reportedly at the heart of the Senate debate the day before, when he said that no Australian government, regardless of political afflation, "acknowledges or accepts" the term occupied. The comments sparked an intense debate, with opposition senators claiming the nation had supported UN resolutions which described East Jerusalem areas as settlements; with one claiming the move was effectively a "massive shift" in Australia's foreign policy. Australia has not always had such a clear stance regarding Israel's settlements. The report cited former foreign minister Bob Carr expressing vocal criticism of Israel's West Bank settlements. - PM's office: Israel will not unilaterally withdraw from West Bank. Denouncing Lapid peace plan, officials say you don't make concessions for nothing in return; Herzog urges Yesh Atid to leave coalition. Israel will not make unilateral withdrawals from the West Bank, particularly if Hamas continues to hold sway, officials from the Prime Minister's Office said Sunday. The officials were responding to Finance Minister Yair Lapid's new peace plan that called for evacuation of parts of the area. Officials also dismissed the finance minister's demand that the Israeli government produce maps outlining future borders, saying "Any map that is presented will become the point of departure for the Palestinians' demands." "Anyone with political experience knows that you don't make concessions without [getting] anything in return, especially with a government partnered with a terror organization that wants to destroy Israel," officials said. The sources also referred to the 2005 disengagement from Gaza as proof of the futility of these measures. "We saw in Gaza the results of unilateral withdrawal," they said. "The prime minister will continue to lead the State of Israel responsibly, while preserving the national interests of the citizens of Israel, starting with its security." In a far-reaching speech at the Herzliya conference, an annual national security gathering, Lapid issued an appeal to return to negotiations with the Palestinians — despite the new Fatah-Hamas unity government — and outlined a new framework for peace that would draw borders and progress in three separate stages of Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank. The finance minister also threatened to topple the government if right-wing calls to unilaterally annex areas of the West Bank are implemented. Opposition leader Isaac Herzog appealed to Lapid to act on his threats and establish a coalition with the Labor party. "Go, get out of the government, it's not too late," he said, following Lapid's speech. "Join us, and I promise you I will bring the other partners." Housing Minister Uri Ariel of the Jewish Home party responded derisively to the finance minister's threats, saying, "Israeli governments existed in the past without the Yesh Atid party, and will continue to exist without it." - Bennett Presents Annexation Plan: The Oslo Era is Over."It's time to admit that unilateral steps don't work," says Jewish Home chairman as he officially presents his annexation plan. Economy Minister and Jewish Home chairman Naftali Bennett officially presented his annexation plan during a speech at the Herzliya Conference on Sunday. Under the plan, Israel will gradually annex Area C of Judea and Samaria, where 400,000 Israelis reside alongside some 70,000 Arabs, while creating an enhanced autonomy in the remaining areas with full freedom of movement. The first area to be annexed would be Gush Etzion, an idea Bennett recently brought up during a speaking appearance at the Bar Ilan University. The second part of the plan includes offering Israeli citizenship to 70,000 Arab residents living in the areas to be annexed, resulting in 1.77 million Israeli Arabs instead of 1.7 million today. "With the formation of the Hamas-Fatah government, we must recognize the truth - the Oslo era is over. After 21 years of trying one way which included unilateral withdrawals, concessions, releasing terrorists, disengagement and a unilateral separation - it's time to admit that it does not work," said Bennett in his speech. "We discovered that when you run away from terror and throw away the keys - the terrorists come after you. We left Gaza, and thousands of rockets are falling on us today," he continued. "It's time to think creatively how to build a better reality here for the citizens of Israel and for the Arabs residing in Judea and Samaria," added Bennett, referring to his annexation plan. "They're already running their own lives. They have a parliament of their own, their own education systems, their own rule, and even elections and that will continue," he stressed. "We have no interest in running their lives for them. Additionally, we will upgrade infrastructure and create transportation contiguity for all residents - Jews and Palestinians - who live in Judea and Samaria. It is important to remember that true peace grows from below." Bennett went on to attack the false hopes touted by the left for years. "I know the plan is not perfect and does not realize the utopian dream that was launched in that handshake between Yitzchak Rabin and Yasser Arafat 21 years ago in the Rose Garden at the White House," he said, but added, "This plan gives the Palestinians an independent government and economic prosperity while giving us, the State of Israel, sovereignty, stability, security and a maintaining of our homeland."Bennett has long advocated for sovereignty over Area C of Judea and Samaria, which contains all the Jewish communities, most notably in a viral video released shortly before his election to government. He recently drafted a letter to Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, demanding that Israel establish full sovereignty over "settlement blocs" in Judea and Samaria. The demand came after the Palestinian Authority (PA) violated the Oslo Accords by taking unilateral action and applying for membership in fifteen different international organizations. - Knesset to discuss IDF's use of live-fire zones to relocate Palestinians. Comes in wake of Haaretz expose in late May that military exercises in live-fire zones were partly aimed at removing Palestinians from those areas. The Knesset will discuss the Israel Defense Forces' use of live-fire zones as a means of removing Palestinian residents from their dwellings at a plenary discussion on Wednesday. The discussion comes in response to an urgent question poased by MK Tamar Zandberg (Meretz) to Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon, following a report in Haaretz (May 21, 2014) that a senior IDF officer had confirmed that military exercises in live-fire zones were partly aimed at removing Palestinians from those areas. Zandberg asked how the statement by Col. Einav Shalev accorded with the State's version that the firing zones were chosen on purely military grounds. She also asked what would be done in order to avoid using the army for political purposes. A motion for an urgent discussion on the same topic was filed by MK Dov Khenin (Hadash). His motion was based both on the report in Haaretz and on the State's reply to a petition filed with the High Court of Justice. In its reply on May 29, the State declared its intention to legalize seven houses belonging to settlers in the outpost of Avigayl, situated in Firing Zone 918. That is the same zone in which the state is seeking to destroy eight Palestinian villages and expel their residents. MK Khenin's urgent motion was joined by MK Eitan Cabel (Labor), MK Jamal Zahalka (Balad) and MK Ibrahim Sarsur (Ra'am-Ta'al.) The motion was denied by the Knesset's presidium, but when the deputy minister replies to Zandberg's question, he will have to respond to the questions of the other Knesset members as well. - Israel pushes bill permitting forced-feeding of Palestinian prisoners. Controversial bill supposed to deal with hunger striking; opposed by doctors, human rights advocates. The Knesset is expected to approve a bill that would allow hospitals or prisons to force-feed prisoners on hunger strike. The bill has already passed its first reading and the final vote comes as 82 Palestinian prisoners are currently in Israeli hospitals after being on a hunger strike for more than 50 days. The prisoners, who are protesting Israel's policy of administrative detention without charges or trial, are taking mineral supplements and drinking water. "The bill's aim is to prevent prisoners and organizations from exerting pressure on Israel by means of a hunger strike," Public Security Minister Yitzhak Aharonovitch said during the Knesset discussion on the bill. "They use such strikes to try to stop administrative detentions and obtain easing of restrictions….the state's interest is for no prisoner to die as a result of a hunger strike." The bill has set off a firestorm in Israel. The Israel Medical Association (IMA) is set to distribute a booklet to all doctors in the internal medicine wards where Palestinian prisoners are being treated. The booklet takes a strong stand against force-feeding based on international law. "Every day, the number of hunger-striking prisoners sent from the prisons to the hospitals is growing," Dr. Leonid Eidelman, the director of the IMA wrote in a letter sent to doctors in all Israelis hospitals over the weekend. "Treating them presents a special challenge that doctors have hitherto not encountered on such a scale." There are currently some 5000 Palestinian prisoners in Israeli jails, including 180 who are being held under administrative detention. These orders based on emergency regulations from the time of the British mandate, allow the state to jail someone without charges or trial for up to six months, if revealing the evidence against them could compromise national security. The six month term can be renewed repeatedly. (Ynetnews 19 June 2014)

- Israel needs massive fence on eastern border. Op-ed: As ISIS fighters approach Jordan, breached border poses an imminent threat to Israel. The ISIS leaders have blown their horn ("nafir") in regards to Jordan. This is a religious term adopted by this organization, which means that its next target, after the collapse of Syria and Iraq, is the Hashemite Kingdom. These days they are already choking it out from the direction of the two dead countries: The black al-Qaeda flags are displayed over the border crossing between Jordan and Iraq, and there is also a large presence of ISIS men from the breached territories which were once called Syria. The borders between Syria, Iraq, Lebanon and Jordan are being erased under the feet of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant organization – and what was true in the past 100 years is no longer valid. The ISIS has many supporters in Jordan – in the south; in the leadership of the Bedouin town of Ma'an, which is already under a siege of the Jordanian security forces following mass rallies in support of the organization; and in the north, where there are many Salafis among the Palestinian population. In a vide message this month, senior ISIS members called on soldiers in the Jordanian army, police and security organizations not to fight them, but to join the Salafi revolt. Moreover, they threatened that anyone fighting them would be brutally destroyed. "We defeated America in Afghanistan, in Iraq and in the rest of the states of Islam, and we are on our way to Jordan," they declared. "If we managed to beat America, we will also beat its heretic supporters." ISIS members refer to the Jordanian king as "taghut," the instigating Satan, and their clear goal is to remove his regime. The key question is whether the leaders of the kingdom's Bedouin tribes will support Abdullah, who they are not so fond of for many reasons, for example due to his support for the United States. The ISIS is working to convince them to abandon the king, following its success among the leaders of Iraq's Sunni tribes. The organization's goal is that the Jordanian army will not fight it, just like most of the Iraqi army deserted the battlefield for tribal and communal reasons. All this means that the trouble is approaching Jordan, which is surrounded by a radical Islamic storm. This is the state which was established by the Brits in a bid to eat into the territories of the promised Jewish state, and the ISIS reiterates that there is no such thing as Jordan and there never was. As far as the organization is concerned, Jordan should be part of the huge Islamic caliphate it seeks to establish in the entire region. Our border with the Hashemite Kingdom is the longest, and is in fact the only one which is breached. The illusions of "peace" have led many people in Israel to believe that the state of calm from that direction will remain forever, just like the regime there will remain forever. But if we take a look at much stronger countries which have collapsed, we'll understand that Jordan is in trouble. Just like we are distancing ourselves from the communal fire raging in Syria, we must do the same in regards to what could happen in Jordan. The time to build a massive security fence on the eastern border, like the one with Sinai, was yesterday – but it's not too late. We must start building it from the south and north simultaneously due to the expected threat: Refugees, terror, weapons, Salafis and subversion. Our unshut border with Jordan is now turning into a threat. This also demonstrates the extent of the existential risk in US Secretary of State John Kerry's demand that we hand the Jordan Valley over to Arab hands. This means that the ISIS would have quickly reached that area too, and then Judea and Samaria, and then central Israel would have ceased to exist. In light of the imminent threat, we must do the exact opposite of what the secretary of state demanded: Shut the border with Jordan with a fence in the Jordan Valley as well, set up a series of military Nahal communities and take control of the area as security precautions. Clearly, we must strengthen the settlement there, as well as in the Arava region and Beit Shean Valley. The Arab Spring has turned out to be a jihadist spring of the Middle Ages, which is removing countries, regimes and borders. We must be prepared. (Ynetnews 29 June 2014)

- Cabinet approves NIS 300 million for East Jerusalem development. Development plan designed to decrease violence in east Jerusalem through development in infrastructure. The Cabinet approved a NIS 300 Million Socio-Economic Development Plan for Eastern Jerusalem Sunday, laying out a program drafted by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu that, according to a press release, focuses on decreasing violence in the area by providing improved infrastructure, security, job opportunities, and education facilities. The plan is apparently the result of "comprehensive discussions" between the Director of the Prime Minister's Office Harel Locker, Cabinet Secretary Avichai Mendelblit, and Mayor of Jerusalem Nir Barkat, which were initiated to decide how to counter an "increase in incidents of violence and stone-throwing in the area." According to the Cabinet, there were some 390 incidents of stone-throwing in eastern Jerusalem just from March-April in 2014 but police projections say that the new project could reduce violence by as much as 50%. Economic Minister Naftali Bennett was also named as having played a key role in presenting the plan which will "emphasize the advancement of children and young people in the 10-35 age bracket," taking into consideration that, "young people are easily influenced and are more inclined to take part in violent, nationalist or other activities." "Investing in the younger population has the potential to serve as an impetus for change," read the Cabinet statement. According to the Cabinet, infrastructure work will center on key areas such as sewage, water, electricity and roads while educational initiatives would provide, "higher education and vocational training including pre-academic classes" that would increase qualification within the population for jobs important to societal advancement. The teaching of Hebrew would be increased in East Jerusalem school under the plan and a portion of the funds would go towards job creation, but the cabinet was unclear what steps will be taken to meet this goal. Instead they stressed the current difficulties east Jerusalem residents have in completing school and finding their way into a work-force with little opportunity. Increased security will also be a focal point of the new plan and the government in due to increase police and surveillance presence in East Jerusalem. Government figures say that some 306,000 people reside in the eastern district of Jerusalem making up 20% of Israel's "minority population". Some 30% of children drop out of high-school for various reasons. (Ynetnews 29 June 2014)
