- Municipality approves construction of 200 housing units in Jerusalem. Despite international criticism, construction of 200 additional housing units was approved in a Jerusalem neighborhood adjacent to the Green Line. The housing units are to be built in Ramot, the capital's largest neighborhood at Jerusalem's northern edge, where 244 new housing units were approved only last week. The land on which Ramot was built was annexed by Israel after the Six-Day War, and is considered an Israeli settlement by the international community. The municipality explained the decision, saying construction in Jerusalem is necessary for enabling young people to live in the capital. In the beginning of the month the municipality approved the construction of 500 housing units in the North-Jerusalem neighborhood of Ramat Shlomo, on the other side of the Green Line. "Criticizing the decision is hypocritical, for the committee which approved the construction also approved Arab housing units in the same meeting", a municipality official stated. - Israel Proposes Electronic Gates for Al Aqsa mosque in Jerusalem city. An Israeli proposal to install electronic detection gates on all entrances of Al-Aqsa mosque in occupied East Jerusalem. The Israeli news source Walla has reported that the Israeli Minister of Public Security Yitzhak Aharonovich plans to replace the current gates to Al-Aqsa mosque so that all praying Muslims will be scanned and searched at the new e-gates whenever they attempt to enter the holy site. "The Muslim prayers will be subject to a very accurate search and scanning and those who are granted clearance to pass through those gates will surely be free of all metals and fireworks," said the news source. The Israeli news source said that the aim in installing electronic gates was to ensure that Palestinians will not be able to carry or smuggle into Al Haram Al Sharif any instruments and materials that could be used in confronting the Israeli occupation forces. - Lieberman: Israel will never limit East Jerusalem settlement building. 'We will never accept the definition of building in Jewish neighborhoods of Jerusalem as settlement activity,' says foreign minister to German counterpart. Israel will never agree to limit its construction activity in East Jerusalem, Foreign Minister Avigdor Lieberman said on Sunday. "One thing should be clear: we will never accept the definition of building in Jewish neighborhoods of Jerusalem as settlement activity," he said at a news conference with his German counterpart Frank-Walter Steinmeier. "We won't accept any limitation on building in Jewish areas of (East) Jerusalem," he said. His remarks came four days after Israel approved plans to build 200 homes in Ramot in East Jerusalem despite months of almost daily clashes and tensions there with Palestinians, triggered in part by settlement expansion. The announcement prompted a sharply-worded rebuke from Washington which reiterated its "unequivocal" opposition to such construction in East Jerusalem, warning it could "exacerbate this difficult situation on the ground and... will not contribute to efforts to reduce the tension." Israel captured East Jerusalem during the 1967 Six-Day War and later annexed it in a move never recognized by the international community. It refers to the entire city as its "united, undivided capital" and does not view construction there as settlement activity. The Palestinians want the city's eastern sector as capital of their future state and vehemently oppose any Israeli attempt to expand construction there. (Ynetnews 16 November 2104)

- In the shadow of attack: 78 units were approved in Jerusalem city. The local planning and building in the city approved two programs for the construction of 78 housing units in Har Homa and Ramot settlements. The first program includes approval of a residential building 15 stories high, with 50 units Samuel Wall Street neighborhood of Har Homa. This is a particularly sensitive spot. Any construction in this neighborhood inspires the wrath of the international community, since it is built on an area that the Palestinians claim to get near them at any future peace settlement. The second plan includes building permits for two residential buildings of 28 units in Ramot, some located beyond the Green Line. This is part of a larger project with 156 units. - Administrative Process: Expropriated land included in Plan to build 640 housing units in the settlement of Eli. Palestinian village council heads of A-Sawaya, Luban a-Sharqiya, and Qaryut, with Bimkom – Planners for Planning Rights and Yesh Din, today petitioned the Supreme Court demanding it prevent the Civil Administration from approving a detailed master plan for the settlement of Eli. According to the petition, 221 dunams not declared as state land are included in the settlement master plan. Their inclusion in the settlement plan effectively expropriates these lands, without public announcement or right of appeal, gravely violating the rights of residents of the neighboring Palestinian villages. The petition also calls on the Court to order the Civil Administration to halt all new construction and refrain from granting construction permits in the plan area. The petition was submitted after the Civil Administration rejected an objection to the plan submitted by Bimkom and the councils of A-Sawaya, Luban a-Sharqiya, and Qaryut, claiming the master plan does not include a new declaration of state land, only a “technical” correction of mistakes made during the 1983 declaration of state lands. Submitted by Attorneys Michael Sfard, Shlomy Zachary, and Muhammad Shuqier from Yesh Din’s legal team, the petition argues that Eli’s master plan now includes some 1,000 dunams and authorizes the construction of 620 housing units, of which many have already been built illegally prior to the plan. According to Supreme Court rulings and several State commitments, settlements may be established or expanded only when land has been declared government property or if it was purchased by Israeli citizens. And yet, the plan for the settlement of Eli includes extensive areas never declared as state land. According to on-site measurements, 221 dunams - approximately 22 percent of the total plan area – are not included in the only declaration of state land completed in the area in 1983. The Civil Administration’s “Blue Line Team” re-examined the borders of the 1983 declaration and decided on substantial and extensive changes without any due process. In so doing, the State has effectively violated the Palestinian residents’ right to appeal the decision at the Military Appeals Committee. In addition to violating the rights of Palestinian residents in the neighboring villages, the settlement master plan is a substantive violation of administrative norms, as the Civil Administration's Blue Line Team is not authorized to declare state land. Architect Alon Cohen-Lifshitz of Bimkom: "Israel declares that it does not build settlements on land other than state land. Yet the Civil Administration's Blue Line Team has declared various lands to be government property without any possibility of appeal. This practice enables the ongoing theft of Palestinian property, both private and collective." Attorney Shlomy Zachary of Yesh Din's legal team comments on the petition: "The Civil Administration's shortcuts to promote construction plans in settlements repeatedly lead to violations of the rights of Palestinian residents and communities. The thirst for land annexation and expropriation is unquenchable. In addition to the daily price Palestinians must pay, this process also contradicts the basic principles of the rule of law." - Planning panel meeting Monday to discuss new Jewish neighborhood in East Jerusalem. Plan for more than 600 housing units in Ramat Shlomo was advanced by PM Netanyahu last week, sparking new diplomatic crisis with United States. Site is important nature zone for birds, deer and hyraxes. The District Planning and Building Committee will discuss Monday the construction of 640 housing units in Ramat Shlomo, a Jewish neighborhood situated over the Green Line in East Jerusalem. The construction plan is one of two in East Jerusalem declared by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last week, reportedly as part of the response to Palestinian violence in the capital. The U.S. administration has already condemned construction in both areas. The construction plan is to extend over 76 dunams (19 acres) in the northern part of the ultra-Orthodox Ramat Shlomo neighborhood and will bring it very close to the Palestinian neighborhood of Beit Hanina. This plan was discussed a few years ago but rejected when it was realized that in order to build the neighborhood, land would have to be expropriated from Palestinian owners. That is because while the neighborhood itself is built on Jewish-owned land, the road to it passes through Palestinian-owned land. However, the area of the plan was earmarked for future construction in Jerusalem's new master plan, despite vigorous objections from environmental groups. Although the areas in question are privately owned, the plan was submitted to the district planning committee by the Jerusalem municipality and Moriah, a municipality-owned infrastructure company. Planning officials said Sunday they believed the submission was made by these bodies so the expropriation of land could be moved forward. Most of the area planned for the new neighborhood has been marked in an urban nature survey by the Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel as Atarot Stream South. The SPNI survey describes the site as rich in terms of nature, with a herd of deer, hyraxes and other mammals, and as an important feeding and hunting zone for birds that winter in Jerusalem and nest there in spring. It is also home to a variety of reptiles and insects, the report states, and is one of the westernmost sites where hyraxes have been observed. The new plan joins an older one to expand Ramat Shlomo that was approved by the district planning committee in 2010. That sparked a major diplomatic crisis with the United States because the approval came during an official visit by Vice President Joe Biden to Israel. A crisis with the United States also broke out last week over the decision to advance the current plan. A few hours after the prime minister announced the construction in East Jerusalem, State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki said that such construction is not "conducive to what they state they want to achieve, which is peace in the region and a two-state solution." Psaki said U.S. policy was clear and "continues to oppose unilateral steps that would prejudge the outcome of negotiations on Jerusalem." The European Union also criticized the planned construction in East Jerusalem and asked Israel for clarifications. (Haaretz 3 November 2014)

- Israel advances plan for 500 settler homes in East Jerusalem. Plans to build homes on private land in haredi neighborhood of Ramat Shlomo have been kept low profile in an apparent bid to avoid friction with Washington. An Israeli government committee on Monday advanced plans for 500 settler homes in East Jerusalem, an official said, in the face of disapproval from the United States at construction beyond the Green Line. The Interior Ministry panel's preliminary approval of the new homes for Ramat Shlomo, a neighborhood built on West Bank territory captured in the 1967 Six-Day War and annexed to Jerusalem in a move not recognized abroad, was kept low profile in an apparent bid to avoid friction with Washington. The plans have been postponed for several years because of low chances they would be approved, but approved in an unscheduled meeting after Netanyahu gave his blessing to construction in the capital. The new housing units will be built on private land that belongs to a haredi group, and will join the construction of some 1,600 other housing units already approved that will be built on Israel Land Authority lands. The 500 new housing units will be built in an area between the haredi Ramat Shlomo neighborhood and the Arab Beit Hanina. This is only the first step in a long series of approvals needed before actual construction can begin and the process should take years. Still, it is likely to further upset Washington, which has condemned the plans amid rising tensions in the city. A week ago, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu ordered plans for some 600 housing units for Ramat Shlomo and another 400 for Har Homa, another East Jerusalem neighborhood, to be advanced. - Housing Minister: 'No Limits from Any Gentile' on Construction. Construction and Housing Minister Uri Ariel visits Rachel's Tomb, says it is time to build freely for Jews throughout the Land of Israel. Construction and Housing Minister Uri Ariel (Jewish Home) visited Rachel's Tomb Tuesday, and called for the government to build freely for Jews in the Land of Israel. "It is time that there will be full construction, in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, the Negev and Galilee," he said, "without any limitations from any gentile or anyone else, like we learned from previous generations." Ariel used the Hebrew word "goy," which means "gentile" but also "nation," and he could well have been using it in the second sense, or purposely employing a double entendre. Danish Foreign Minister Martin Lidegaard, who arrived on a visit to Israel on Monday, condemned Israel's announcement of new construction in the Ramat Shlomo neighborhood of Jerusalem. According to a report, Lidegaard's condemnation came ahead of a meeting with Israeli Foreign Minister Avigdor Liberman. Later, in a joint conference with Liberman, Lidegaard said that he condemns the construction of the housing units because it "hinder(s) negotiations and the two-state solution." The Committee for Planning and Building in Jerusalem officially approved the construction of 400 housing units in Ramat Shlomo in Jerusalem Monday, just one week after Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu officially approved over 1,000 housing units in that neighborhood and in Har Homa that have been slated for construction since as far back as 2010. The move is sure to draw international criticism, as similar moves have been met so far with threats and ire from the UN, EU, and US. (Israeli National News 4 November 2014)

- Right-wing MKs submit bill to apply Israeli law to West Bank settlers. Gal-On: Bill is a combination between annexation and apartheid. Senior MKs on the Right on Tuesday sought to apply all laws to Israelis living in Judea and Samaria, with a bill that would require the IDF to issue orders identical to laws the Knesset passes. According to the initiative, within 45 days of the Knesset passing a law, the OC Central Command would order that it apply to the West Bank. The cabinet discussed taking similar action with labor laws earlier this week, requiring Israeli businesses in the West Bank to provide Israeli minimum wage and benefits to all employees, Israeli and Palestinian, among other changes. The new legislation was proposed by Land of Israel Caucus heads Yariv Levin (Likud) and Orit Struck (Bayit Yehudi), and was co-sponsored by coalition chairman Ze'ev Elkin (Likud), Bayit Yehudi faction chairwoman Ayelet Shaked, Shas faction chairman Avraham Michaeli, Knesset Law, Constitution and Justice Committee chairman David Rotem (Yisrael Beytenu) and United Torah Judaism faction chairman Menahem Eliezer Moses. According to Levin and Struck, the bill would not change the status of the land in the West Bank and does not violate the tenets of international law by which Israel behaves in the area. Levin and Struck explained that 350,000 Israeli citizens live in the West Bank who vote for the Knesset, but their lives are not run by Israeli law and government, rather by the Defense Ministry. As of now, only 16 laws were applied to the West Bank via legislation, which could be seen as a step toward annexation, including tax laws, the requirement to serve in the IDF and criminal law. Any other laws were applied via a military order. The bill's explanatory portion states that "the law in Judea and Samaria today relies on Ottoman, Jordanian, British and Israeli laws, as well as many [military] orders... This system creates legal confusion and intolerable differentiation between the rights and duties of Israeli citizens who live in different parts of the land." The MKs called the situation "unacceptable from a democratic point of view," which they said harms the rights of Israelis living in the West Bank and leads to discrimination against them. "This bill will protect the rights and duties of Israeli residents of Judea and Samaria," Struck and Levin wrote in a joint statement. "There is no justified reason for Israeli citizens living in Judea and Samaria not to be able to have their rights and duties established by their representatives in the Knesset, who were elected to do so, even if sovereignty is not applied to the land.” Meretz leader Zehava Gal-On slammed the bill, calling it “a malignant combination of annexation and apartheid. “Applying Israeli law is de facto annexation of the occupied territories, and applying it only to settlers creates racial discrimination,” she said. “This is another step in the bizarre campaign to do everything to discredit Israel in the world and turn it into a leper in the eyes of the international community.” (IPOST 7 November 2014)

- Ministers approve applying Israeli law in West Bank settlements. The bill - which would not apply to Palestinian population - was approved despite the AG's opposition. Despite the attorney general's opposition, the Ministerial Committee on Legislation approved Sunday MK Orit Strock's (Habayit Hayehudi) bill making state laws apply to West Bank settlements. The law would not apply to the Palestinian population in the territory. The bill was sponsored by key Knesset figures behind the effort to annex the settlements, Likud MK Yariv Levin, coalition chair Ze'ev Elkin (Likud) and Habayit Hayehudi faction chair Ayelet Shaked, along with Strock. Finance Minister Yair Lapid and Justice Minister Tzipi Livni cast the lone “no” votes, saying they would file an appeal, meaning the bill's progress would be postponed. Housing and Construction Minister Uri Ariel blasted Livni: “Sometimes it sounds like, as far as you're concerned, the settlers are fine for paying taxes, fighting and dying, but not for living.” He added, “You won't convince me that serious action has been taken on this matter. What we have here is crude discrimination against residents of the State of Israel. Enough of the evasions. You know how to demand obligations, but when it comes to rights, you have all sorts of arguments against. It's a disgrace to the concept of a Jewish and democratic state. It's even more than disgraceful.” Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein announced his opposition to the bill. In an opinion submitted to the ministerial committee, he said the bill would hurt the IDF Central Command's standing as sovereign in the West Bank. The bill would require that every law passed by the Knesset be published as a military regulation by the head of the IDF Central Command within 45 days of its approval, so that it would apply equally to the settlements. - Leftists Livid: 44 Critical Roads Slated for West Bank Settlement. Is the 'covert' building freeze due to be torpedoed entirely? Half of long-standing plan for new roads approved as leftists fume. The State of Israel's "building freeze" in West Bank may be drastically closer to breaking permanently, IDF Radio revealed Monday - as it has an elaborate contingency plan in place to improve the entire road infrastructure in the region, across a 300 kilometer (186 miles) span. The plan has been formulated over more than two decades, sources revealed to the news agency, and includes 44 significant road update programs to strengthen Israeli settlements in West Bank. The plans have not yet been launched, sources say - but 24 of the programs have been pre-approved thus far, and may be implemented in the not-too-distant future. Approved roads would see new highways built between Salfit city and (nearby) Bruchin; Modi'in and Givat Ze'ev; Dir Amar and Bitilu; a road bypassing Salfit to the North; Tzomet Anatot to Route 1; a road bypassing Tekoa; a connecting route between Shiloh and the Alon road; and roads bypassing Bituneh and Hawara. Other roads slated for confirmation include a bypass through Leben-a-Shrika, a road from Sha'ar Hagai to Mevo Horon, a bypass from Silat a' d'Har, a road from Ya'abed to Ta'anech, a road from the Ben Shemen interchange to Atarot (near Jerusalem), a bypass through Bitilu, a bypass through Harvata, a road from Har Adar to Nabi Samuel (near Jerusalem), a Baka-al-Sharika bypass, Route 531 to "Al-Fundak," a Hawara bypass, and an Ein 'Arik bypass. Still other planned routes include a route from Rt. 80 to Ma'ale Adumim, a road from Latrun to Rt. 443, an Eastern Givat Ze'ev bypass, a Beit Sahour bypass, a connection between Rt. 45 and Dolev, a Mahula bypass, a road between Rt. 443 and Ein 'Arik, a road between Ofra and Ba'al Hazor, a Kfar Tlot bypass, an extension of the Walaja bypass, an Ouja bypass, a road between Nahliel and Ras-Karakar, a turnoff from Route 90 to Almog, and an Eastern Halhul bypass. According to IDF Radio, in order to execute the plans, the State of Israel would have to declare some 25,000 dunams (6177 acres) of land as "state land." IDF Radio also revealed that part of the program was instituted in "a deal Netanyahu, the settlers, and the right-wing coalition closed two weeks ago" and that more road construction may be on the agenda in the not-so-distant future. - Labor MK hits back at massive increase in Settlement Division budget. Stav Shaffir exposes increase in division's budget from NIS 58 million to NIS 140 million in 2015, says taxpayer money used for political organizations. The budget for the World Zionist Organization's Settlement Division, which was already the subject of public scrutiny, was increased in the 2015 State Budget from NIS 58 million to NIS 140 million, according to Labor MK Stav Shaffir, who raised the issue at a State Control Committee meeting on Monday. "It is simply absurd that in Israel in 2014 there is a body that receives hundreds of millions from the country and does not have to be accountable to anyone about what they are doing with this money," Shaffir said at the meeting. "Taxpayer funds of the citizens of Israel that are directed to the division turn into political funds with the help of an extortionist lobby of the extreme right-wing," Shaffir continued. "And this fact does not concern the Finance Ministry, that not only does not put an end to the cash flow that has no supervision, it also gives them a treat." The State Control Committee held a special meeting on Monday surrounding the exposure of budgets transferred to the Settlement Division, and to the West Bank specifically - a subject that arouses agitation among left-wing politicians. In the past, a heated conflict arose between Shaffir and members of the Bayit Yehudi party, among them MKs Ayelet Shaked and Orit Stroom. "I expect the Finance Ministry, that prides itself in transparency and new politics, not to enable one shekel to pass without knowing its specific destination and not to double the funds for those who hide from and deceive the public," said Shaffir. In the latest debates on the issue of the Settlement Division budget, several lawmakers rose up against the budget issue, with Shaffir leading the charge. The freshman MK claimed that while the Settlement Division promotes its aims to support the development of towns in southern Israel that border the Gaza Strip, most of the funds of the division go towards the settlements beyond the Green Line and others are sent to bodies that are considered political organizations. About a month ago, during a debate in a Finance Committee meeting, an uproar broke out after it was discovered that the primary investments of the Settlement Division were allocated within the borders of the West Bank and the funding increasing significantly each year. MK Zehava Gal-On of Meretz said "I sent a request in 2013 to implement the Freedom of Information Act for the Settlement Division and nothing has happened yet. I want answers, and to get an idea of how this business is being run." Shaffir added during the debate, "You told us the Settlement Division funds go to everyone. To the Negev, Galilee, Golan and every region in Israel equally. I have to say that before we found out where the funds go – the additions added to the base funding of the division, and the increase of the funding by hundreds of percentage points every year – all of these facts raised suspicion." "Left-wing organizations are painting a distorted picture of the budget," said Shaked. "They are ignoring the fact that the Negev and Galilee get funding from other places as well, while projects in Judea and Samaria solely get funding from the Settlement Division." She added that, "The Labor Party, which once worked to build settlements, now works towards tearing them down. The budget of the division increased because the operational arm of the government that sends projects to it during the year was approved by the government." (Ynetnews 11 November 2014)

- Government passes controversial Jewish nationhood bill. After fierce verbal clashes between coalition members, Netanyahu administration approves contentious legislation officially designating Israel as home of Jewish people. The government passed on Sunday the contentious Basic Law: Israel as the Nation-State of the Jewish People, a controversial new bill which is threatening to tear the governing coalition apart, in a 14-7 vote, which saw the coalition split in its support for the legislation. All of Yesh Atid's ministers voted against, as did Justice Minister Tzipi Livni, while all of the Likud, Yisrael Beiteinu and Bayit Yehdai minister voted in favor. Culture Minister Limor Livnat abstained from the vote, and was the sole Likud minister not to follow the party line. The bill recognizes Israel's Jewish character, institutionalize Jewish law as an inspiration for legislation, and delists Arabic as an official language. The bill is expected to go to the Knesset later this week for its first reading, but its final form is likely to be more moderate. Arab rights groups call it racist, and the attorney general has expressed reservations. "This is a law that Ben-Gurion and Jabotinsky would have opposed," Yesh Atid Chairman Yair Lapid said, slamming the proposed version of the bill, which is actually two different proposals being voted on one after the other. The cabinet debate took a turn for the dramatic with harsh tones, table slamming, and round-robin attacks from ministers Lapid, Livni, German, Piron, and Peri on Prime Minister Netanyahu for advancing the legislation. "You are proposing legislation which will ruin our democracy. You want a religious state." "We wouldn't have gotten to this point if Livni had acted otherwise," Netanyahu responded, referring to the justice minister's decision to postpone a ministerial committee debate on the issue. "A feeble policy does not serve the present reality." (Ynetnews 23 November 2014)
- Knesset Approves $5.2m for East Jerusalem "Settlement Security". The Israeli Knesset Finance Committee recently approved an additional 20 million NIS (roughly $5.2 million) for funding security in settlements built in occupied East Jerusalem. Estimations made by Israeli Finance Ministry place the cost of protecting each settler in these Palestinian neighborhoods amounts to approximately 30,000 shekels per year, according to Al Ray Palestinian Media Agency. The Israeli Housing and Construction Ministry claim that the additional funds are a one-time increase aimed at purchasing more surveillance cameras and other technology, and will be reduced in years to come. Funding for the security of Jewish settlers in occupied East Jerusalem has reportedly risen at a constant rate over the years, from 7 million shekels in 1991 to double this figure in 1995, and to some 51 million shekels by the year 2010. Al Ray notes that the Israeli Housing Ministry currently employs 370 security guards in East Jerusalem to protect settlers in the Old City's Muslim Quarter, as well as settlements in Abu Tor, Silwan, Ras al-Amud, A-Tur , and Sheikh Jarrah. As many as 500,000 Israeli settlers now live in various developments throughout the occupied Palestinian territories, in contravention of established international law. (IMEMC 23 November 2014)

- PM orders $18m allocated to create space for homes at settlement. Finance minister balking at PM's demand, which would relocate Border Police base to provide room for more housing at Beit El, wants issue to be brought before cabinet for vote. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has ordered the Finance Ministry to allocate funds to move a Border Police base in order to make room for additional housing in the West Bank settlement of Beit El. However, Finance Minister Yair Lapid is refusing to transfer the funds, demanding instead that the issue be brought to the cabinet for a vote. Netanyahu's order is pursuant to a deal reached in summer 2012, under which Givat Ulpana – a neighborhood of Beit El that the High Court of Justice had ordered demolished because it was illegally built on private Palestinian land – was vacated voluntarily, thereby avoiding the need for forcible eviction. Under the deal, temporary housing was set up for the 30 families who lost their homes, and the state approved construction of 30 new apartments for the use of the Beit El Yeshiva; the latter are currently being built. The government also agreed to plan and fund four public buildings in the settlement and to relocate a Border Police base from Beit El so that 300 housing units could be built in its stead. Since all the other land around Beit El is privately owned by Palestinians, there is nowhere else for the settlement to expand to. The police base itself is located on state land. The base is intended to be moved across the road, to land previously seized for military purposes and on which an abandoned base now stands. The government has hitherto declined to say how much the move would cost, and has even denied that any such agreement existed. But Netanyahu recently asked the treasury to allocate 70 million shekels ($18.1 million) to finance the base relocation and the other projects in Beit El. Lapid, however, refused, arguing that a sum of that magnitude, and for a project of that nature, requires a cabinet decision. And since Netanyahu is reluctant to bring the issue to the cabinet – for both diplomatic and political reasons – the relocation is currently stuck. But Beit El residents have been pushing the government to move forward. In an interview with Arutz Sheva last September, the former chief rabbi of the settlement, Rabbi Zalman Melamed, said, “The prime minister promised that if I called for refraining from any real opposition to the destruction of the Ulpana houses, 300 housing units would be built, and another 30 units would be built for the yeshiva, and other things. But the prime minister cheated me and isn’t keeping his promise.” Melamed said that when the 300 houses came up for approval, “the prime minister stopped it and is preventing it from happening. I’m disappointed and frustrated over this.” In an interview with Beit El’s local newsletter last Friday, Housing and Construction Minister Uri Ariel said the project “has been on my desk for a long time already, and I’m working to find a solution that will enable construction of the 300 houses. Unfortunately, even after I obtained an explicit order from the prime minister for the finance minister to fund the relocation [of the base], the finance minister has been refusing, so construction of the houses isn’t happening.” Ariel demanded that Netanyahu “work to carry out the agreements he personally promised to Rabbi Melamed.” No response was received from the Prime Minister’s Office at press time. - AG: No indictments over illegal West Bank construction. Legal watchdog group Yesh Din petitions High Court, demands builders in Ofra settlement be brought to justice. The legal watchdog group Yesh Din petitioned the High Court of Justice on Thursday against Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein’s decision not to prosecute officials who admitted to illegally constructing a sewage treatment plant for the West Bank settlement of Ofra. According to Weinstein, because the state has not brought criminal charges against illegal construction over the years in the West Bank, even the few individuals who have been investigated cannot be charged because that would be unfairly discriminating against them in relation to others who have not been charged. In February 2012 the chairman of the Yesha Council of Settlements and then-deputy chairman of the Mateh Binyamin Regional Council, Avi Roeh, was interrogated under warning by the police southern district fraud squad on charges of constructing a sewage purification plant for the settlement of Ofra on private Palestinian land and issuing fraudulent permits to do so. Roeh admitted to the police that this was the case, but Weinstein declined to prosecute Roeh and then-regional council chairman Pinhas Wallerstein. This ran contrary to Weinstein’s repeated public statements about the need to prosecute those responsible for illegal construction in the West Bank. The facility in question was built in 2008, when threats of fines and prosecution over the channeling of sewage into a nearby wadi led Wallerstein and Roeh to build a waste treatment facility on lands belonging to the village of Silwad without obtaining the proper permits. The plant was funded by the state to the tune of millions of shekels. When the Civil Administration issued a stop-work order, the council issued a fictitious construction permit to the firm building the facility. In 2008, the owners of the land and Yesh Din petitioned the High Court against the construction and the state pledged not to operate the facility until its legal status was put to rest. Yesh Din also brought a civil suit, still pending, and filed a police complaint in the matter. Roeh told police during questioning that the permit he had signed was “not final” because he knew the land was privately owned. Wallerstein, who is currently a consultant to the Ministry of the Development of the Negev and the Galilee, was also questioned under warning at the time, and admitted that he had initiated the project and that the council did not own the land. However, according to a letter sent to Yesh Din by Weinstein’s aide, Adi Menahem, a month after the decision was made to close the case without bringing charges, “The establishment of the purification facility was intended to meet the needs of an important public ... this does not justify in any way illegal construction, but public need, financing by the state and the time that has elapsed since construction must be taken into account. In this case, this would be a precedent-setting indictment because until now there has hardly been criminal enforcement of planning and building offenses in Judea and Samaria.” Menahem said the attorney general had decided “that it would be incorrect to begin criminal enforcement and serve a preliminary indictment in the case of construction for public needs.” In its petition to the High Court, Yesh Din stated: “The attorney general has repeatedly granted complete immunity to the settlers’ leaders with regard to building offenses and the stealing of private Palestinian land,” and called the attorney general’s reasoning for closing the case “scandalous.” In a similar case, the state asked the High Court not to prosecute a developer, Yoel Tzur, who built 14 buildings and prefabricated housing in the Ulpana neighborhood of the settlement of Beit-El, on private Palestinian land. Tzur admitted under questioning that he knew the land was privately owned. In that case as well, State Prosecutor Shai Nitzan decided to close the case because administrative enforcement had been implemented, and this obviated the need for criminal enforcement. Another hearing on this case is to be held next month. (Haaretz 30 November 2014)
